Behind the Scenes: Cinematography Field Trip to Studio Lab's VR Wonderland

On a beautiful October evening, our Cinematography class ventured out to Studio Lab in Derry, NH, for an insider's look at a top-notch Virtual Reality production facility during their industry night. Students toured impressive studios, state-of-the-art recording spaces, and high-tech edit suites where the magic of filmmaking comes alive. The highlight? A sneak peek at the massive portable LED screen, recently used in a gin commercial. This innovative screen acts like a green screen, motion-tracking with the camera and adapting in real-time to perfectly match the creator's vision. We wrapped up the night with a garden BBQ, mingling with studio professionals from diverse backgrounds and departments, deepening our understanding of the industry roles.

Special Screening: Reality Frictions with Steve Anderson

On the final Tuesday of October, Professor Jason Mittell hosted an engaging screening of Reality Frictions, a new feature-length video essay by filmmaker and scholar Steve Anderson from UCLA. Reality Frictions dives deep into the intersections of fact and fiction on Hollywood screens, spotlighting those moments when real-world images, people, or events intrude upon cinematic narratives. In a time of generative AI and synthetic imaging—when distinguishing real from fake grows increasingly challenging—Reality Frictions offers a compelling exploration of how audiences have long developed sophisticated ways to navigate the blend of reality and illusion in media. Richly illustrated with clips from over 100 films and shows, this video essay is both an entertaining and thought-provoking investigation into media's role in shaping truth and history.

Guest Speaker Spotlight: David Bloch

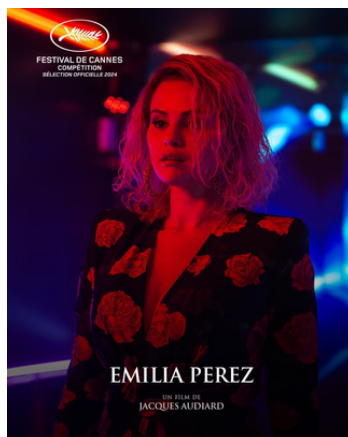

This month, our Media Curation and Exhibition students had the incredible opportunity to engage with Middlebury alum David Bloch '86, a film marketing expert whose clients include Netflix, Amazon, A24, and Universal. David did campaigns for Brokeback Mountain and Chicago among others.

In class, David shared his expertise on acclaimed writer-director Jacques Audiard, using this quote from NY Times to describe his work:

"Audiard's entire oeuvre can be seen as a means of imaginatively aligning himself, as well as the viewer, with the outsider". Besides focusing on The Outsider as a key theme in Audiard's films, David provided analysis of his movies as great examples of films where fantasy meets social realism.

"On one level, it's entertaining; on another, it's artistically and socially relevant. It satisfies many different tastes by operating on multiple planes", says David about Dheepan.

David's insights set the perfect stage for our next Hirschfield Screening of Emilia Pérez, as we dive deeper into Audiard's creative world with our upcoming event.

Movement Matters Series: A Creative Journey with Jillian Meyers

This October, we teamed up with the Dance Department to dive into the fundamentals of choreography for the camera, guided by Emmy-nominated LA-based choreographer Jillian Meyers during her week-long residency. Students explored the powerful blend of movement and cinematography, creating a piece with Jillian that culminated in a captivating presentation on Friday, November 2nd. Jillian, an assistant to renowned choreographers like Brian Friedman, Tovarís Wilson, and Mia Michaels, also worked with Mandy Moore on the award-winning La La Land. Both Jillian and Moore received Emmy nominations for their work on Zoey's Extraordinary Playlist. It was a privilege for both Dance and FMMC majors to learn from and connect with such an inspiring industry expert!
