Why did you choose the Middlebury Institute?

I wanted a school that would foster the skills I had learned living abroad into something marketable. The IEM program felt like it was tailor-made for me: I'd be able to continue using Spanish, and I would have the opportunity to gain hands-on experience through the practicum. And since I'm from Nebraska, the proximity to the ocean (and sea otters!) was a huge draw.

What makes the Institute a special experience for you?

I get to have class with some of the most dynamic people I've ever met, and learn from professors who are generous with their time and knowledge.

What's next for you?

My experience studying abroad marked a definite before and after in my life, and I can think of no better way to pay tribute to that experience than by ensuring that other students have the same opportunity. I'd like to maintain my connection with the Spanish language and work to create the best possible study abroad programs in Spanish-speaking countries for students at the college level.

Master of International Education Management (IEM)

This three-semester, 43-credit program specifically teaches you to design, develop, and administer cross-cultural programs—in study abroad, international student services, citizen diplomacy, language schools, and more.

Our Faculty

All of our faculty have 15 to 30 years of recent professional experience in international education, in addition to their research and publication, ensuring that you are learning the latest practices. They are actively engaged in major international organizations, including NAFSA, the Forum on Education Abroad, Diversity Abroad, and CIES. They bring a genuine commitment to your success and become mentors and colleagues.

The Institute Advantage

You'll spend the first two semesters at our Monterey campus followed by a professional four- to six-month practicum working with study abroad programs, international student advising offices, colleges and universities, nonprofits, language programs, and government agencies. Students convert their practicum opportunities into full-time offers or leverage the experience to land jobs. Our partnership with Middlebury Schools Abroad provides opportunities in 38 cities around the world.

The growth of study abroad and international education has fueled a demand for professionals with advanced training. You can gain the intercultural confidence and specialized skills to help create global citizens.

The world needs people like you.

Additional Program Options

Joint Master of Public Administration and Master of Arts in International Education Management

Learn to use education as a tool for global development and social change. Earn two degrees in five semesters. Integrated curriculum features four semesters of course work and a semester-long professional practicum.

Paul D. Coverdell

Peace Corps Fellows Program

Scholarship and internship opportunity for Returned Peace Corps Volunteers.

Options for Peace Corps Service

Interested students can integrate Peace Corps service into their degree.

Specializations

Earn additional credits to align with your career goals:

- Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages (TESOL) or Teaching Foreign Language (TFL)
Open up career avenues in language education and curriculum design.
- Language Program Administration
Prepare to direct language education programs and train language teachers.

- Intercultural Competence

Learn to lead and train multicultural teams, sensitively interact with diverse stakeholders, and create effective assessments and training materials.

Career Outcomes

Because language and intercultural competence studies are central to the program, IEM students graduate with the confidence to work worldwide in study abroad, student services, higher education, professional training, and policy and research.
