THE VISION OF KATHRYN W. DAVIS

2021

Projects for Peace

When Kathryn W. Davis turned 100 years old in 2007, she set out to challenge today's generation of college students to undertake Projects for Peace. She said to the students: "Come forward with your ideas, shape them into actionable projects, and I'll give you the resources to do your projects."

Students heard the call and responded to her challenge; this volume portrays what unfolded in the summer of 2021 as a result. They demonstrated that today's youth — tomorrow's leaders — want to be engaged, want to make a difference. The students' projects took place in many different locations around the world, but all of them were built on person-to-person relationships, the role of leadership, and finding ways to improve the human condition in the quest for peace.

We celebrate the life of Kathryn Davis as a leader — leading others in "preparing for peace."

Davis United World College Scholars Program

The Davis United World College Scholars Program is a major philanthropic force in promoting international understanding. Currently, Davis philanthropy partners with 99 colleges and universities to internationalize the American undergraduate experience through scholarships awarded to over 12,000 students.

These globally minded scholars are from the U.S. and 165 other countries, and have proven themselves while completing their last two years of high school at one of 18 United World College schools located in Armenia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Canada, China, Costa Rica, Eswatini, Germany, Hong Kong, India, Italy, Japan, Norway, Singapore, Tanzania, Thailand, the Netherlands, Wales, and the United States. Since its inception in 2000, the Davis UWC Scholars Program has become the world's largest privately funded international scholarship program for undergraduate education.

“My many years have taught me that there will always be conflict. It’s part of human nature. But I’ll remind you that love, kindness, and support are also part of human nature. My challenge to you is to bring about a mindset of preparing for peace, instead of preparing for war.”

KATHRYN W. DAVIS

Creating and Leading Projects for Peace, 2007–2021

The founding force behind the Projects for Peace initiative was internationalist Kathryn W. Davis who, on the eve of her 100th birthday, asked me to design a program for college students that would, in her words, “bring about a mindset of preparing for peace, instead of preparing for war.” Kathryn gave an initial $1 million that we divided into a hundred $10,000 summer grants for which students at our partner schools of the Davis United World College Scholars Program competed. That was in 2007, and Kathryn found the results so promising that she made philanthropic provisions for funding ongoing annual competitions and grants for winning Projects for Peace to continue long after she passed away in 2013 at the age of 106. Her vision and her legacy remain very much alive, and I have been extremely privileged to lead the program in her spirit.

Kathryn and I were aligned that we would not define “peace” for prospective grantees, and instead intentionally challenge and empower today’s motivated students to think deeply and define for themselves what that word means and how, with a summer grant, they might advance that concept in meaningful ways. Projects for Peace is above all an educational exercise that can lead to real and achievable goals.

At the heart of our collective thinking about peace — and however that term pertains to everything from interpersonal to geopolitical issues — is the belief that conflict is inherently a part of the human condition, and the best we can do is to learn how to constructively engage with conflict. Kathryn and I felt our own generations had failed to significantly advance the cause of peace. We wanted to challenge younger generations with their own opportunities to grapple with that reality. We hoped that Projects for Peace would provide a discovery process and the development of lifelong skills that would, in one way or another, contribute to peace-building in the 21st century.

“While peace may be an ever-elusive goal in today’s world, Projects for Peace seeks to make a difference by empowering those eager to take personal responsibility for positive change. The inventiveness, energy, and commitment of our student grantees are qualities central to building stepping-stones toward peace in the 21st century. The Projects for Peace initiative gives motivated students the opportunity and the resources to do so.”

PHILIP O. GEIER, PH.D.
CREATOR AND DIRECTOR OF PROJECTS FOR PEACE

Now in its 14th year, Projects for Peace has awarded 1,800 grants. Projects have been undertaken in 139 countries by students from more than 100 partner institutions. Middlebury College has been one of those partner institutions of Projects for Peace since its inception, as well as serving as the headquarters of the Davis United World College Scholars Program since 2005. This affiliation has deepened over the intervening years, during which time I have become profoundly impressed by Middlebury’s unique global reach and educational programming. That impression has led to fruitful discussions with its president, Laurie Patton, about how Projects for Peace might thrive over its next many years as part of Middlebury, further establishing its status as a locus among its peer institutions for advancing experiential learning for new generations of students.

President Patton and I have agreed on a new structure enabling Middlebury to integrate Projects for Peace thoroughly into its extensive global ecosystem, maximize the potential of Projects for Peace through its considerable alumni network and its dedicated liaisons on the campuses of partner institutions across the U.S. The program will become part of Middlebury’s Center for Community Engagement and led by Betsy Vegso, who brings more than 15 years of domestic and international programming in intercultural competence. At this exciting point of transition, I remain deeply appreciative of Kathryn’s vision and of the ongoing Davis family philanthropy which makes Projects for Peace, in its many manifestations—past, present, and future—possible. I am confident that Middlebury will enhance the possibilities of Projects for Peace and inspire a growing cohort of young peacemakers to realize their greatest potential, sparked by their own projects.

With gratitude and hope,

The Projects

As these projects demonstrate, today's youth—tomorrow's leaders—are engaged and want to make a difference. They see the need to build a foundation for peace out of many different building blocks. They see that peace is more than the absence of war. They see that peace takes focus, persistence, cultural sensitivity, and plain hard work. And they are inspired by the vision and generosity of the Davis family.

On the following pages are brief sketches of a cross section of the projects, informed by student reports and photographs. These projects are a combination of those 2020 projects deferred due to COVID-19 along with 2021 awarded projects. A complete list of the projects, participants, schools, and the countries where they took place can be found beginning on page 43.

Through these projects, many small yet meaningful steps have been taken toward "preparing for peace."

“Peace is the lack of oppression. There cannot be peace if there are oppressed groups.”

MARIANA ORIAS LÓPEZ, COLLEGE OF THE ATLANTIC

Estudio de Arte Móvil Sahuinto

Bolivia
 Mariana Orias López
 College of the Atlantic
 2020

Mariana Orias López grew up in Sucre, Bolivia surrounded by the community crises wrought by climate change. She carried this knowledge with her as she grew up and left to attend high school at UWC-USA, and then enroll at the College of the Atlantic (COA). In 2018, she watched wildfires ravage her home and felt compelled to step towards the crisis. She launched “Estudio de Arte Móvil Sahuinto,” a project designed to “promote environmental consciousness through the arts by creating community conversations with a problem-solving approach.”

“The Bolivian education system does not include environmental education in its curriculum,” she writes in her report. “I believe this is a capstone for acquiring better environmental conditions and eliminating the extraction of natural resources.” Orias López organized workshops in various Sucre neighborhoods that employed puppetry, painting, acting, and various other artistic media to build trust and openness. “Through the arts we could break the ice, experience joy, cultivate our creativity, and have powerful conversations,” she writes, noting that as the summer went on, participants grew more expressive and willing to have difficult conversations.

Together, Orias López and the participants identified key climate issues, including polluted water supplies and improperly regulated landfills, affecting the community and devised action plans to pressure oversight entities to enact overdue change. Reflecting on the process, Orias López notes: “While it is true that we could not solve the problems that these communities are facing, we could bring the injustice to light, identify the real problems of the communities from their own life experiences, and imagine and explore different solutions.”

United against Unplanned Pregnancy and STDs

Rwanda
Diane Toussaint Mbahoze
College of Idaho
2020

Insufficient sex education and access to services to promote sexual health are dishearteningly common issues. Diane Toussaint Mbahoze saw the repercussions of those circumstances for women in her home country of Rwanda who were isolated from any opportunity to dictate the terms of their sexuality and reproductive health. She aimed to do something about it, focusing on the “young girls and women from [her] own community unable to achieve their career and educational goals due to lack of proper sex education, lack of access to birth control methods, and the stigma around seeking information on menstrual or sexual health.” This led to her project, “United against Unplanned Pregnancy and STDs.”

Mbahoze identifies the main goal of the project as being “to educate Rwandan youth about reproductive health with the focus on how to prevent unplanned pregnancies and STDs through destigmatizing sex education, providing unbiased information, and free services such as counseling and HIV testing.” She enacted these goals by working with partners in various Rwandan communities, diligently coordinating with local government officials to ensure that every workshop and testing site could carry on without putting anyone at risk of contracting COVID-19. Mbahoze notes that it was “difficult,” but that because she had a “trustworthy team” she was able to complete all but a small handful of the proposed ventures.

Considering the project as a whole, Mbahoze writes “our hope is that those who were able to join us will educate others in their respective homes who couldn’t join us and create a ripple of information so that more people are well educated about their reproductive health and the social issues that lead to ignorance and misinformation.”

“Bias-free sex education is a human right that should be enjoyed by everyone especially those who have historically been limited to proper sex education.”

Water to Promote Food Security in Varzi-Kanda Village, Tajikistan

Tajikistan
Amina Fatkhulloeva
Concordia College
2020

“I visualize peace as the ability for people to live a life without a worry for their basic needs....having food, water, shelter, and safety.”

AMINA FATKHULLOEVA, CONCORDIA COLLEGE

Shifting weather patterns associated with climate change have resulted in communities the world over confronting previously unimaginable drought conditions. The impacts are numerous, and for the village of Varzi-Kanda, Tajikistan, it has led to increasing food insecurity stemming from disrupted farming routines. Amina Fatkhulloeva, who grew up in Varzi-Kanda, felt compelled to devote energy to lessen her community's hardship. With the support of her father, who still lives in Varzi-Kanda, Fatkhulloeva organized engineers and vendors to enact her project, one that would build out an irrigation system to support farmers' ability to grow healthy crops and feed the community.

The pandemic disrupted Fatkhulloeva's initial plan to conduct the project over summer 2020, but she and her team stuck with it, problem-solving increases in supply costs and COVID-19 travel disarray to start the 10-week build in May 2021. After weeks of navigating attempted price-gouging from vendors and delays in equipment delivery, the team set about constructing the pump and irrigation channels. “To ensure the sustainability of the project, electricity for the pump is derived from renewable energy, hydropower,” writes Fatkhulloeva, intent on ensuring that the project is not just a short-term solution but instead a permanent provision to guarantee water will continuously flow to the fields of Varzi-Kanda.

“I visualize peace as the ability for people to live a life without worrying for their basic needs,” writes Fatkhulloeva, going on to define those basic needs as “having food, water, shelter, and safety.” Erecting the irrigation channel means that the villagers of Varzi-Kanda can “practice sustainable agriculture and have more control over their farming” and keep food on the table for every corner of their community.

Research and Development of Guidelines for Clean Cookstove Technology in Tanzania

Tanzania
 Julia Clevinger and Katharine Watson
 Gettysburg College
 2020

The ongoing COVID-19 pandemic impacted proposed Projects for Peace in a number of ways. For Julia Clevinger and Katharine Watson, public health regulations concerning outside workers entering refugee camps rendered their original project proposal, "Training and Empowering Refugee Women through Clean Energy Solutions," untenable. However, Clevinger and Watson remained committed to completing a project, and so reimagined their work to become "Research and Development of Guidelines for Clean Cookstove Technology in Tanzania," preserving their initial hope to empower communities with clean energy technologies.

Clevinger and Watson partnered with the local company Consumer's Choice Ltd. (CCL), a business specializing in ethanol-powered cookstoves. The collaboration focused on distributing the cookstoves throughout the community in concert with a push for better access to information on the positive impacts, both local and global, of a large-scale transition to clean energy cookware. "Many people use the cheapest, easiest-to-access technology that they can find," write Clevinger and Watson. "In Tanzania, this is often because the average family lives day to day in terms of income," and so the partnership with CCL and use of Projects for Peace funding helped circumnavigate that economic barrier.

In addition to cookstove distribution, Clevinger and Watson generated reports and articles leading to a document they submitted to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization. They hope this action will help guide future endeavors on how to "best subsidize and market" clean cooking technologies in communities that could benefit from improved access to clean cookstoves and similar products.

"Peace is to feel the harmony between the body and the Earth, and to understand how one cannot survive without the other."

JULIA CLEVINGER & KATHARINE WATSON, GETTYSBURG COLLEGE

Language and Libraries: Expanding Educational Resources for Kosovar Youth through English Learning and Library Access

Kosovo
Valdrin Halitjaha
Lake Forest College
2020

“Peace for me is when the communities share similar problems, and solving these problems together makes it easier than trying to solve them separately.”

VALDRIN HALITJAHA, LAKE FOREST COLLEGE

Growing up in Kosovo, Valdrin Halitjaha experienced the challenges of accessing English-language education. “While English is taught in all public and private schools in Kosovo, there are not many opportunities to further interact with the English language outside of the classroom if one cannot afford it,” he writes. This is unfortunate because, in a country such as Kosovo where varied ethnic communities do not speak each other’s language, English can function as a bridge over communication barriers. “These communities have been a part of an ethnic conflict for decades,” writes Halitjaha, and so he developed his project with the aim of promoting equitable access to English-language learning through book reading.

Halitjaha designed an “immersive” four-week program at the public library in Suhareka to support students in reading, writing, listening, and speaking English skills over the course of four-hour sessions that met five times a week. In addition, Halitjaha used project funds to expand the library offerings, adding 250 English-language books to the collection, as well as donating 543 books to a local elementary-school library so the school could qualify under city regulations to hire a full-time librarian. All told, the sessions drew 120 participants who read the books, wrote about them, and then discussed them together with Halitjaha.

Halitjaha is hopeful that the work will continue as he was able to coordinate with local educators and city officials to lay the groundwork for future initiatives. He also walked away feeling reconnected to his home community, and inspired to “start making plans for future projects that I could implement once I return to my home country.”

Virtual Reality: Bringing Peace to Hospice and Palliative-Care Patients

USA

Katie Howarth, Maya Peleg, Harrison Diehl,
Erin Miller, and Yasmine Alansari

Savannah College of Art & Design
2020

“Virtual reality is the future of medicine, and I am so proud to have been a part of this journey and to see the untapped potential of this technology.”

KATIE HOWARTH, SAVANNAH COLLEGE OF ART & DESIGN

Hospice and palliative care are defined by the hope of making the end-of-life process as smooth and painless for patients as possible. For all the medical advances made to refine this process, the fact remains that patients are often confined to limited environments or even bedridden. Katie Howarth and a group of her classmates at SCAD saw an opportunity as artists to complement traditional medical care for hospice patients by providing “distraction therapy and life-enhancing experiences” through a relatively untapped resource: virtual reality (VR).

Partnering with the local organization Hospice Savannah, Howarth and her classmates set out to design VR experiences that directly provided what patients in palliative care and their doctors reported as being desired and most beneficial. “While there are some places on the West Coast (of the U.S.) using VR in hospice care, there are few on the southeastern coast,” writes Howarth. “After researching the programs offered, we also decided as a group that as artists we can create something beyond what has been created so far, focusing on the art and look of an experience rather than just the technology.” They designed three experiences with all ability levels in mind, as well as collaboration with doctors to make sure none would cause motion sickness or other unintended side effects.

While COVID-19 forced the project implementation to wait until visitor restrictions to hospice centers were lifted, Howarth and company have been able to work with 15 patients, and have plans in place to continue the process indefinitely. Howarth writes that the experience “has helped [her] to realize [her] passion of helping others” and how to implement VR “to help people in ways they did not know were possible.”

“From this experience, I learned how much my community needed a space where ethnic division does not exist but instead collaboration and team spirit is emphasized....education is an important tool to reconnect my community.”

KOROTOUMOU “KATY” BALLO, SKIDMORE COLLEGE

Learning Center for Peace to Rebuild Anyama

Côte d'Ivoire
 Korotoumou “Katy” Ballo
 Skidmore College
 2020

Korotoumou “Katy” Ballo witnessed the sorrow and division that civil war causes growing up in Anyama, Côte d'Ivoire before resettling in the United States. When a country and community lack spaces that foreground the need for unity across ethnic divisions, discord thrive in its place. Over time though, youth activism sprung up to attempt to counteract the existing community boundaries in pursuit of a more unified future, and Ballo decided that she wanted to become involved in the process of healing her home country. It was this sentiment that prompted her to design her project, “Learning Center for Peace to Rebuild Anyama,” to take place at her former high school.

The concept was to build out a library and community center that served both the students at Collège Saint Michel d'Anyama (CSM) and the broader Anyama populace, empowering students and community members to design clubs and activities that incorporated diverse groups in a setting committed to bridging ethnic divides. Ballo, through a combination of donations and purchases with grant funds, brought computers and over 3,500 books to CSM. Her team hit a snag in realizing that the existing space was too small, but through problem-solving with community partners, Ballo was able to oversee a renovation that expanded the learning center.

While the renovation meant delaying the opening of the learning center to the public, CSM students are already utilizing its resources and space. “I believe that the peace project made Anyama and CSM feel like a joyful place with hope for a better tomorrow,” writes Ballo. She hopes to return permanently to Anyama and establish a nonprofit that continues this work.

“The CwD team defines peace as a setting void of war, conflict, economic, social and political instability, persecution and violation of human rights...the ability for people of all backgrounds to feel safe and thrive.”

LINA TORI JAN, UNIVERSITY OF RICHMOND

Chai wa Dastan (Tea and Tale)

USA/Global Focus
Lina Tori Jan
University of Richmond
2020

Displacement as a result of political upheaval, war, and the resultant persecution often experienced by those living in the affected areas have long created a loss of place, community, and culture for those forced to relocate. Women and girls make up nearly half of the global refugee population, a personal reality for Lina Tori Jan. Tori Jan migrated from Afghanistan to the United States, and ever since that time has been focused on identifying ways to preserve a sense of cultural identity and community both for herself and the many Afghan refugees worldwide. It was this urge that compelled her to design “Chai wa Dastan (Tea and Tale),” a podcast series focused on preserving stories from Afghan women.

While Tori Jan’s initial plan was to enact her project in person with a small group of Afghan refugees based in Richmond, Virginia, constraints from the COVID-19 pandemic inspired her to go global. The resulting podcast approach enabled “refugee and immigrant women to tell their stories of perseverance, strengths, struggles and hopes verbally to the rest of the world,” writes Tori Jan. Her goals for the project were to “aid participants in their attempts to use their voices, connect with others, share life lessons, and celebrate one another,” as well as to “play a small part in addressing the lack of a greater community...and literary/language skills to communicate with, which is often experienced by refugee and immigrant women.”

The renewed crisis in Afghanistan in summer 2021 amplified the need for projects like Tori Jan’s. She and her team hope to continue recording and releasing episodes indefinitely so that more and more Afghan refugees can share their stories and lives.

“Kung Flu” Fighters: Illuminating Resilience & Solidarities among the Chinese Diaspora

USA
Sabrina Lin
Amherst College
2021

Sabrina Lin’s project is the culmination of ideas and research that she has worked with for years. She connects it to her senior thesis, which “examined intergenerational difference in how Chinese American women were navigating the pandemic’s resurgence in violent xenophobia.” Continuing with the central focus of Chinese Americans, she developed VIRAL LOVE, a podcast series intended to “paint a more nuanced picture of Chinatown” as “a place with stories and dramas of its own, and a place that we might look to as a microcosm of class and race tensions in America as we move towards becoming a majority-minority country.”

Lin’s initial idea was to take an international approach, but the timing of COVID-19 surges and travel restrictions made that impossible, and so she pivoted to focus solely on the United States by visiting various Chinatowns in Oakland, Los Angeles, Houston, and New York City, and producing episodes about each community. Coordinating travel and securing interviews in multiple cities over the course of months was a challenge for Lin, but she found that over time, as she spoke to more people who connected her in turn with potential interviewees, the biggest challenge was having too many wonderful options to choose from.

In the end, Lin produced two episodes about each Chinatown, one as an introduction, and the other as her on-the-ground reporting. While Lin notes that it would be impossible for a single project to reflect the totality of Asian American experience, she hopes that VIRAL LOVE can play “a small part in complicating viral media headlines” by capturing and relaying Chinatown’s often overlooked humanity.

“In contexts of racial violence, it’s easy for definitions of peace to collapse into tired maxims of multiculturalism and colorblind harmony.... VIRAL LOVE takes peacebuilding to be a much more complex project.”

SABRINA LIN, AMHERST COLLEGE

Gua Le Mara (Power to the Woman)

South Sudan
Grace Sandia Taban
Bates College

Grace Sandia Taban was concerned about the limitations society can place on women in her home country of South Sudan. She designed a project for women to learn skills that in turn could help them establish economic agency. Her approach was to teach women in two South Sudanese communities how to make beaded bags and soap to help them see related business opportunities, all the while holding conversations on ways to reduce gender-based violence.

Writing about why she developed her project, Sandia Taban notes "Gua Le Mara was inspired by the need to improve the quality of life of an average South Sudanese woman that reduces dependence on gendered roles or their partners." She goes on to point out that this work fits into an overall hope of hers to counteract "the constant narrative on mainstream media of South Sudan as a failed state due to the continued ethnic conflicts since its independence in 2011," an approach that fails to address the humanity of average Sudanese citizens simply trying to build a life.

Sandia Taban and her team successfully carried out the project in two communities. Reflecting on the experience, she writes that Sudanese women's "self-efficacy is crucial towards sustainable peace because it allows them to fully contribute to the growth of their local communities. It gives women a voice beyond their household roles, and helps counteract societal restraints regarding contributions women can make outside the home."

"Growing up in a patriarchal society, peace for me means seeing women equally contributing in the spaces they occupy....Peace is allowing everyone to define the table before even getting a seat at it."

GRACE SANDIA TABAN, BATES COLLEGE

“I have learned about the stages involved in providing affordable and accessible health care... from funding to creating awareness. This has provided me with experience working with underserved communities and deepened my interest in public health.”

RUBY AHAIWE, BOWDOIN COLLEGE

Gbasaa Ozi! (Spread the Word!)

Nigeria
Ruby Ahaiwe
Bowdoin College
2021

Even when she left her home in Isiala Ngwa, Abia, Nigeria to study at Bowdoin College, Ruby Ahaiwe kept her roots close to her heart. She took on a remote internship with Chinonye Hospital in Abia to promote community health and a connection to the hospital. She walked away from that experience knowing she had more to give to help promote and support health care and safety in her hometown, and so turned to Projects for Peace to do so. She designed her project to “create rural health awareness and increase access to health-care information...with the purpose of bridging the gap between modern medicine and traditional care.”

“I have always dreamed of working back home because I believe that the change we seek in our countries begins with each and every one of us as individuals,” writes Ahaiwe, and “Gbasaa Ozi!” marked her first time in six years physically returning home so she could do just that. The work of building awareness of health-care services and establishing trusting relationships between medical staff and community members was made up of distributing fliers, holding conversations, and even training members of the general public to be community health advocates.

“I believe the project contributes to peace by acknowledging that everyone deserves the right to adequate and proper health care,” writes Ahaiwe. “Without good health, people can neither control nor lead their daily lives.” Even with this project done, Ahaiwe is attending graduate school to study vaccine indifference and hoping to return home once again to continue her work.

Education for Disabled Children in Baham, Cameroon

Cameroon
 Olivia Tchilibou
 Case Western Reserve University
 2021

A childhood visit to l'Association Humanitaire Pour la Promotion des Personnes Socialement Vulnérables, a school for disabled children in her hometown of Baham, Cameroon, imparted a lasting impression on Olivia Tchilibou. "I was shocked by the environment in which they received an education," she writes. "There was only a single classroom which was small and not adequate for their respective handicaps, and they did not have modern bathrooms." While studying at UWC Red Cross Nordic and Case Western Reserve University, the urge remained to return to that school and improve the circumstances of the children's educational setting. Tchilibou finally did just that during summer 2021.

Tchilibou notes that "children with disabilities are left behind in our societies because people believe that with their disabilities, they cannot achieve anything," a sentiment that she finds preposterous. Her project aimed to completely remodel the school. This included "building a large classroom equipped with accessible desks and chairs, a balcony around the classroom that will permit the children in wheelchairs to be able to move easily" as well as adding "a wide entrance to the classroom which also allows easier access." The design also accounted for segmenting off areas so children with different disabilities could learn in spaces optimized to accommodate and support them.

The experience was a combination of completing a project Tchilibou had long dreamed of implementing alongside connecting and reconnecting to the community around the school in hopes of promoting a broad shift in thinking, one that will find parents growing to "value and seek education for their disabled children." She hopes it will begin to counteract the falsehoods that marginalize disabled children.

"Putting a smile on the faces of these children makes me happy and I encourage people to assist each other. I hope this project will encourage people with disabilities and their families."

Promoting Peace: Empowering Ugandan Youth through Education and Sports

Uganda
Chae Eun Kim and Jessica Galarza
Lehigh University
2021

For Chae Eun Kim and Jessica Galarza, developing their Project for Peace represented a chance to expand on previous experiences. Both students interned for Pathways Development Initiative (PDI) in Budada District, Uganda during summer 2019, working with the locally based nonprofit to support an after-school program called the Sports Clinic. The goal of the clinic was to encourage students to pursue academic success with the same vigor with which they approached athletics, and both Eun Kim and Galarza felt inspired by PDI's work. The two developed their project with the goal of returning to work with PDI and expand the existing Sports Clinic and associated Tutoring Center so that they could reach more students.

While the original plan included working on the ground in Uganda, COVID-19 surges and the subsequent national safety measures forced Eun Kim and Galarza to complete the project remotely. It also resulted in school closures, a development that called into question how effective the Tutoring Center and Sports Clinic could be without active school days. Nonetheless, because of the project team's ability to pivot, PDI established self-guided tutoring routines to help students maintain an educational connection during the lockdown, which in turn transitioned to small group meetings once restrictions eased. Since that time, PDI has established a schedule of meeting with roughly 80 students Monday through Saturday focusing on developing reading and writing skills.

The team's hope is to expand the program to meet with younger students and other community members beyond student-athletes, as they all believe there are many topics, including menstrual cycles, personal hygiene, and sexual harassment, that the program could grow to address.

“PDI has utilized sports as a way to build peace within the community – sports have brought people together through promoting teamwork and striving towards common goals, building relationships, and encouraging communication.”

CHAE EUN KIM & JESSICA GALARZA, LEHIGH UNIVERSITY

“People’s lives are hard, and they are hard all over the world in different ways. Peace is about understanding this hardship, and embracing the exchange of both ideas and lifestyles.”

CRYSTAL FLAX, UNION COLLEGE

Empowering Entrepreneurship Course

Ghana
Crystal Flax
Union College
2021

A consistent roadblock for those with entrepreneurial skills and drive is the lack of “nuts-and-bolts” knowledge of how to run a successful small business. Crystal Flax recognized this fact and wanted to develop a project that targeted workers who had the talent and ambition but needed an opportunity to learn the logistical side of being an entrepreneur. Flax built her project around a previous Union College Project for Peace that created a sewing vocational school, Stitching Talents, in Ghana. She designed an entrepreneurship course for the community at Stitching Talents.

“Entrepreneurial knowledge is unavailable for low-income people, yet their only occupational opportunity is to be a small-business owner,” writes Flax. This reality stems from the lack of primary education available to many Ghanaians and the “predatory loan” structures that seek to exploit the systemic lack of economic education. Such circumstances are especially true for women. “The lowest-income jobs in Ghana are dominated by women, and these women often have children and no husbands,” notes Flax. Therefore, all of Flax’s students were women aged 18-25, and together they learned from each other; Flax focusing on the broad strokes of economic entrepreneurial education, and the students responding with their specialized knowledge of the local community and market.

“In addition to teaching entrepreneurship and math, I made a continuous and deliberate effort to show my students that their education was important and valued,” writes Flax. She hopes that the women she worked with will pass on the knowledge they developed together and build out a sustainable network of Ghanaian women equipped to support themselves and one another.

“The idea of ‘peace’ can feel quite large, but through small interactions like a simple, creative activity, we can support efforts to build communities where peace feels possible.”

KATE WALTERS, ADEN FISCHER-BROWN & NOLA KIM MAYER, VASSAR COLLEGE

makerBoards

USA

Kate Walters, Aden Fischer-Brown, and Nola Kim Mayer

Vassar College

When the COVID-19 pandemic fundamentally changed how communities operated, Kate Walters, Aden Fischer-Brown, and Nola Kim Mayer found themselves brainstorming together about how they might be able to make this new reality easier for their community. “As three Urban Studies students at Vassar, we were already having conversations about how social spaces and interactions would need to adapt to the new norms of a physically distanced world,” they write. These conversations first led them to submit a design to Design for Play in Newburgh, N.Y., a contest aiming to generate creative approaches to filling the city’s empty spaces with COVID-safe play structures. The three friends designed makerBoards for this contest and after winning, saw further potential application in their designs and so built a Project for Peace around the invention.

“Each board is a plexiglass window on wheels, framed with colorful painted wood,” they write. “Think: rolling chalkboard, but transparent. The plexiglass both ensures safety and invites people to come together to play from either side of the board.” Such a design allows face-to-face interaction and joint play without exposing either person to potentially virus-bearing particles. Their project focused on bringing makerBoards to the Hudson Valley Performing Arts Lab (HVPAL) and the youth program at Faith Apostolic Ministries, both in Poughkeepsie, N.Y. Working with each organization, the team designed unique variations on the makerBoard that fit their clients’ needs, incorporating avenues for sound and various mixed-media construction.

Reflecting on the process, the team writes that “drawing, making music, or playing games on a makerBoard with others is a welcome return to imaginative play.... they offer an important opportunity to once again make new connections in one’s community.”
