THE VISION OF KATHRYN W. DAVIS

Projects for Peace

When Kathryn W. Davis turned 100 years old in 2007, she set out to challenge today's generation of college students to undertake "Projects for Peace." She said to the students: Come forward with your ideas, shape them into actionable projects, and I'll give you the resources to do your projects.

Students heard the call and responded to her challenge; this volume portrays what unfolded in the summer of 2013 as a result. They demonstrated that today's youth—tomorrow's leaders—want to be engaged, want to make a difference. The students' projects took place in many different locations around the world, but all of them were built on person-to-person relationships, the role of leadership, and finding ways to improve the human condition in the quest for peace.

We celebrate the life of Kathryn Davis as a leader—leading others in "preparing for peace."

Fellowships for Peace

Established in 2007 as a sister program to Projects for Peace, Fellowships for Peace was envisioned by Kathryn W. Davis as another way to bring about a better world. Fellowships for Peace is a long-term investment in students and professionals poised to create change. Each year, 100 aspiring and experienced peacemakers from all walks of life are granted the funding they need for summer study at Middlebury Language Schools or the Monterey Institute of International Studies. Kathryn Davis Fellows for Peace receive the very best training in foreign language or policy studies and go on to use their skills for the greater good—in peace-related professions and initiatives all around the world.

Davis United World College Scholars Program

Funded by Gale and Shelby Davis, the program is a major philanthropic force in promoting international understanding. Currently, Davis philanthropy partners with 91 colleges and universities to internationalize the American undergraduate experience through scholarships awarded to nearly 2,500 students.

These globally minded scholars are from the U.S. and 149 other countries, and have proven themselves while completing their last two years of high school at one of 12 United World College schools located in Bosnia, Canada, Costa Rica, Hong Kong, India, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Singapore, Swaziland, the United States, and Wales. Since its inception in 2000, the Davis UWC Scholars Program has become the world's largest privately funded international scholarship program for undergraduate education.

Introduction

This volume reports on the seventh year of Projects for Peace, an initiative inspired by the late philanthropist Kathryn W. Davis and designed and directed by veteran international educator Philip O. Geier. The projects recounted here are a powerful testimony to Kathryn's vision and commitment to finding new pathways to peace in the 21st century. To honor Kathryn and her vision, the Davis family remains committed to perpetuating Projects for Peace in the future.

The first projects took place in 2007, funded by Kathryn in celebration of her 100th birthday that year. Kathryn renewed her generous support each year thereafter; because of her, there have been more than 830 projects carried out in more than 100 countries during the past seven years. Inspired by her leadership and example, other philanthropists and college presidents joined in to make still other projects possible. All of this tremendous momentum continues to grow, even as we mourn the loss of Kathryn, who died in April 2013 at the age of 106. Kathryn's legacy, however, is alive and well — as you will see in the pages that follow.

In these pages you will find highlights of the seventh round of projects, which took place during the summer of 2013. They capture the innovation, energy, and effort of young people motivated by Kathryn's inspiration and generosity to build stepping stones to peace in the world.

“My many years have taught me that there will always be conflict. It's part of human nature. But I'll remind you that love, kindness, and support are also part of human nature. My challenge to you is to bring about a mind-set of preparing for peace, instead of preparing for war.”

The Power and Wisdom of Our Founder: Kathryn W. Davis

In August 2006, Kathryn Davis made a momentous decision. She would be turning 100 years old in 2007, and she was feeling a great sense of urgency. Urgency about an elusive goal in her long life: peace in the world. As she reflected on the many years of her life, she felt frustrated that her generation and those that followed had failed in that great quest.

What might she do? Kathryn wondered. She decided it was time to see how fresh and motivated young minds would tackle this perplexing issue. She then made the commitment to use her remaining years to unleash the potential of youth in the quest for peace. How to do that?

She had been watching with interest a program her son Shelby had started with his own philanthropy in 2000: the Davis United World College Scholars Program, which had grown into, and remains today, the world's largest international scholarship program for undergraduates. Kathryn had met many of these United World College graduates as they had become Davis United World College Scholars matriculating at 90 American colleges and universities—including her alma mater, Wellesley, and Princeton, where both her late husband and her son had earned their undergraduate degrees. Given the impressive scope of colleges and universities in her son's program, it occurred to Kathryn that these would be accessible and dependable places for her to try out her idea of Projects for Peace.

Kathryn W. Davis
1907-2013

With enthusiasm, Kathryn provided funding annually and issued her challenge to any and all students on these campuses—as well as to others at International Houses worldwide, Future Generations Graduate School, the Graduate Institute in Geneva, (where Kathryn earned her doctorate some 80 years ago) and the University of Maine—to design and go do whatever projects they felt would contribute to peace and a better world. This volume reports on the 2013 projects and demonstrates how Kathryn’s vision has motivated young people, and how those young people have drawn inspiration from Kathryn.

The Process

Projects for Peace is administered through the office of the Davis United World College Scholars Program, headquartered at Middlebury College. Over the past academic year, competitions were held and selections of projects were made on the many American college and university campuses already part of the Davis United World College Scholars Program, Program, as well as those mentioned above. To make the competition for grants as inclusive as possible, all students on these campuses were invited to design their own grassroots Projects for Peace which, if their proposals were among the winners selected, they would implement anywhere in the world during the summer of 2013. Each of the winning projects was awarded a $10,000 grant, thanks to Kathryn and others who now share her vision. Each project’s total budget could expand, of course, dependent on how enterprising the winning students might be in raising other funds or partnering with existing initiatives or organizations.

Students are invited to give their own definitions of what a Project for Peace should mean. The idea is to spark the students’ own imaginations and to see what fresh thinking might come forth. The Projects for Peace initiative is intended to encourage creativity, innovation, and social entrepreneurship. Projects span the globe, and can take place anywhere, including in the U.S. (see the world map and listings of all projects to date beginning on page 52 of this volume).

Each of the participating institutions is free to promote the competition among its own students and design its own evaluation process for selecting the most compelling proposals. The idea is to encourage all decision making to take place at the campus level, making it more empowering and engaging for each educational community. Other philanthropists and some college presidents have become so captivated by the idea and potential value of this initiative that they are now funding additional projects beyond what Kathryn's philanthropy makes possible.

This year, thousands of student proposals were written, across the nation and around the world. The impact on campuses was inspiring. As one college official reports, "This opportunity and the proposal-development process have produced a wonderful, exciting buzz on campus and among our students." Kathryn's vision and spirit took root in 2007, and the momentum and participation have expanded every year since. The winning proposals for 2013 were announced in the spring, and then it was up to the students to do their projects during that summer—demanding focus, engagement, commitment, and a high degree of personal responsibility. This volume illustrates the results.

Kathryn Davis

A visionary and a personal role model

By Shabana Basij-Rasikh

Imagine growing up experiencing nothing but war. Imagine growing up in a country isolated from the rest of the world, denied an education because you are a girl. Imagine sneaking into a school for several years to learn while risking your life and those of your parents, your sisters, your brothers, and your teachers. Imagine being a confused little girl, not fully understanding why education is worth dying for. And then imagine being able to attend a public school for the very first time in your life at age 12 and falling in love with school! Imagine being one of the lucky eight percent of women in a country to have access to education. Imagine simultaneously feeling lucky and guilty and morally obligated to do something. Imagine being a 17-year-old freshman at an American college. And then imagine reading an e-mail from the president of your college, announcing a $10,000 Project for Peace grant opportunity.

Can you imagine that?

Kathryn W. Davis became a role model for me since the first day I read about her grand vision. Her belief in the power of youth as the real “movers and shakers” was uplifting, energizing, and inspiring. Her vision to work towards peace globally spoke to me. It urged me to do something, to play my part, and to take action.

Throughout her life, Kathryn Davis was a student of the world, and what most fascinated her beyond all the places she went were the people she met and befriended.

The grant announcement was an opportunity I couldn’t stop thinking about. As a privileged Afghan woman who always looked at ways to do something to help improve lives in Afghanistan, I knew such opportunities—trusting youth with a noble responsibility as the Projects for Peace initiatives do—were unfortunately rare. I spent the Thanksgiving holiday thinking about how I could turn this opportunity into action in my home country. The basic needs in Afghanistan are so dire, it didn’t take me long to come up with an idea. With less than 13 percent of Afghan people having access to clean drinking water at that time, I proposed to build six wells to give nearly 6,000 people in Kabul and its outskirts access to clean drinking water. And by doing so, help the children of those communities who were either kept out of playtime or school to reclaim their childhood and right to study. And it turned out that I was one of the lucky winners of the Projects for Peace grant competition in 2008.

I spent the summer of 2008 in Kabul, sharing Kathryn Davis’s vision to bring peace to the world in communities in Kabul and its outskirts. Hundreds of people were touched by her commitment to world peace. In most of these communities, people were so inspired that they offered their support, which in turn allowed me to build three extra wells. I learned a lot that summer working directly with communities, listening to people’s needs, and appreciating what a big difference that can make in community-development work.

Following that summer during which I learned so much and was inspired by Kathryn Davis, I co-founded SOLA—School of Leadership, Afghanistan. SOLA, which means peace in the Pashto language, is a people-to-people nonprofit dedicated to furthering educational and leadership opportunities for the new generation of Afghan women.

SOLA operates a supplemental boarding program for girls in Kabul, Afghanistan. In its first five years, SOLA's school has made significant strides toward establishing itself as an internationally recognized college preparatory boarding school. SOLA is the only boarding school for girls in Afghanistan, and will soon also be the first internationally accredited school for girls there.

SOLA actively recruits students from as many ethnic groups, religious sects, and tribal affiliations as possible. SOLA students to date come from 20 of Afghanistan's 34 provinces. SOLA prepares students for demanding study as well as developing their leadership skills. After one to two years at the school, SOLA helps qualified candidates access scholarships to top-quality schools around the world as well as in Afghanistan. SOLA continues to provide academic, financial, and personal support throughout the students' educational careers. SOLA then helps students with college and advanced degrees assume leadership roles across public, private, and civil sectors back in Afghanistan.

Our near-term goal is to turn SOLA into an accredited, world-class, four-year international college-preparatory boarding school in Kabul predominantly for underserved young Afghan women. By 2017, enrollment will reach 340 students from every Afghan province, ethnicity, religion, and tribal affiliation, as well as from other countries in the region.

In five years, SOLA has helped 36 Afghan students obtain 44 scholarships to 34 schools in five countries. The value of these 132 directly awarded scholarship years is estimated at $6.3 million.

Fifteen SOLA students now attend U.S. colleges such as Bates, Montclair State, and Southern New Hampshire. Thirteen are preparing for college at boarding schools including Brooks, Kent, Loomis Chaffee, Northfield Mount Hermon, St. George's, Stoneleigh-Burnham, and Westover. Six additional SOLA students attend schools in Bangladesh, Canada, Jordan, and the UK.

My passion to realize our vision at SOLA comes from the needs in Afghanistan. Today, around 90 percent of women in Afghanistan are illiterate. Less than six percent of Afghan women hold a university degree. SOLA's accomplishments to date feel like a small drop in the ocean in the context of the dire needs in the country. But it is visionaries like Kathryn Davis who serve as role models for me and so many others, especially at times when it is hard to see any hope or the impact of one's work.

Our wonderful Kathryn Davis died on April 23, 2013, but her legacy lives on through so many of us influenced by her leadership. I had the great honor of speaking at Mrs. Davis's memorial service at her beloved International House in New York City. I shared an example of the remarkable impact she has had in Afghanistan, one that I believe speaks volumes of her vision for bringing peace to the world. Six months after completing the project, I traveled to Afghanistan. One of the people who came to visit me was a man from a community where they had decided to build the well inside the community mosque. Respectfully, the man told me that the mullah and the people in the community prayed for Mrs. Davis's health during Friday prayers ever since the well was built there. What a wonderful tribute!

Kathryn Davis's vision to bring peace in the world was so powerful and her belief in youth so remarkable. She not only touched the hearts of people in Afghanistan and around the world, but she has inspired the many youth who have taken advantage of the opportunities to be the drivers for peace through Projects for Peace.

Kathryn Davis, you are immortal. You will live through the millions of lives you have touched through your grand vision. To me and to many others, you are a true inspiration and great example of leadership, commitment, and compassion. And I thank you for your vision and leadership.

I stand today firm in my personal belief in the power of youth as the real “movers and shakers.” Just as I was uplifted, energized, and inspired by Mrs. Davis seven years ago, so do I act in her legacy every day, in urging and supporting individual Afghan girls to fulfill their potential in Mrs. Davis’s image.

Inspiring Others

Philanthropists and College Presidents Follow Davis Example

Kathryn Davis personified “leading by example.” Her vision and philanthropy inspired and motivated many others to follow her lead. And she didn’t even ask them. They were just taken by her powerful principles and programs. Such is the case with Projects for Peace. Here are two very personal stories from family foundations that have joined the Davis family in growing Projects for Peace.

Howard P. “Pete” Colhoun

The Colhoun Family

“My first introduction to the importance of Kathryn Davis’s Projects for Peace program/mission was 56 years ago when I left Princeton and was a Fulbright scholar in Norway. It was here, for the first time, that I saw the value and significance of learning about foreign cultures. Only by going abroad for extended times does one learn both how different and how similar foreign countries are to the USA. In the many years since my first trip to Norway, the value of this experience abroad has only increased exponentially. The Colhoun family thinks the Davis family is one of the most generous in America and deserves the support of others. The various Davis family programs efficiently and effectively select exceptional young people, and give them an opportunity to become future world leaders. The Colhoun family has invested and continues to invest some of its philanthropy in Kathryn Davis’s vision and encourages other philanthropic families to join us in supporting the unique and imaginative focus of Projects for Peace. We in the Colhoun family especially appreciate giving in this way because our funding goes directly into additional projects and we need not be concerned with the operational or administrative dimensions of the program. We have confidence that our philanthropic dollars are doing directly to the beneficiaries through the innovative design and management of Projects for Peace.”

—Howard P. Colhoun

Linda and Clem McGillicuddy

The McGillicuddy Family

“My wife Linda and I attended a talk given by Phil Geier about what Kathryn Davis was making possible through Projects for Peace. We were simply blown away. To think of a program that expands the imagination and horizons of young college students while planting uplifting demonstration projects in communities across the globe was compelling to us.

“We were envious that this kind of opportunity didn’t exist in our college years, but it occurred to us that we could participate even now. We offered to fund projects at my college of 50 years ago, the University of Maine, known for its engineering college and is especially active in climate studies and sustainability. We were gratified that liberal arts as well as science majors responded so eagerly to the prospect of a Projects for Peace grant. And the results of our first project in 2013 were equally gratifying. A village in Honduras was introduced to a simple low-cost method of water purification and the project was very successful. The student project leader continues to correspond with the host residents and has hopes of expansion in the future.

“Linda and I knew Kathryn Davis for many years. She was a brilliant woman with a consuming desire to promote global peace and understanding. We are proud to play an ongoing part in carrying on her vision. We are committed to future Projects for Peace alongside the Davis family.”

Inspired Presidents

Kathryn Davis also inspired the following college and university presidents to make other projects possible through their own institutional funding, expanding their student opportunities and global impact:

The Projects

As these projects demonstrate, today's youth—tomorrow's leaders—are engaged and want to make a difference. They see the need to build a foundation for peace out of many different building blocks. They see that peace is more than the absence of war. They see that peace takes focus, persistence, cultural sensitivity, and plain hard work. And they are inspired by the vision and generosity of Kathryn Davis.

On the following pages are brief sketches of a cross section of the projects, informed by student reports and photographs. A complete list of the projects, participants, schools, and the countries where the projects took place can be found beginning on page 55.

Through these projects, many small yet meaningful steps have been taken toward "preparing for peace."

“This project showed me that poverty exists in the most remote places of Yemen, in places like the village of Ali Sulieman where electricity and water are scarce and the richness of the people’s lives comes from education and from learning new things.”

Sowing the Seeds of Peace

Yemen
Raba Al-Eryani
Brown University

Raba overcame political unrest and security concerns in Yemen and successfully implemented her project to train 75 women in the Hodieda region in the skills of bee breeding, home gardening, and incense manufacturing. She was able to do this in part because she is a native Yemeni and Arabic speaker, but also because she collaborated with a local organization, the Abi Musa Al Asha'ary Association. Together they hired trainers, engaged volunteers, and selected participants from surrounding villages. Most of the participants were illiterate and had no means of supporting themselves.

Raba was particularly enthused by the response she received in recruiting volunteers. In anticipation of the summer training, she advertised for volunteers, receiving more than 30 applications for three positions. The passion and hard work of her volunteers made Raba realize that volunteerism, a key objective of her project, is becoming an appealing concept to Yemen's youth. Raba believes her project contributed in several ways: skills were learned by the participants that will help reduce the financial burden on their families by adding new vegetable gardens, producing honey, and selling incense. Given the tight-knit fabric of the community, these skills can be shared with many others. In addition, the project created a long-term and productive relationship between the collaborating organization and the local community. For Raba personally, she reported that the project definitely changed the way she views the world by having been face-to-face with the poverty that has swept her country.

“Living together peacefully is not just the absence of violence, but the circumstances in which people and ideas evolve collectively.”

SAIM SAEED, BARD COLLEGE

Living Together— Navigating Common Grounds

Turkey
Saim Saeed
Bard College

Saim collaborated with the United World College movement to implement a summer “short course” in Turkey for young participants from the Middle East, North Africa, and Europe in order to spark greater dialogue between the regions and to encourage the participants to become active members of society. Fifty-two participants from 24 countries devoted two weeks to stimulating discussions and workshops on a range of topics including politics and political systems, civil society and social movements, conflict analysis and mediation, identity, migration, and integration. In addition to the Projects for Peace grant, Saim raised other funds in order to provide need-based scholarships for participants.

The short course program was hosted at a school in Turkey and was built around three pillars: theory-based discussion during “theme days,” practical engagement with societal issues during “community interaction days,” and guidance for the development of individual projects. Saim reports that the project was truly a transformative experience and related that the local Imam was so impressed by the diverse assemblage that he invited all of them to his family home for Eid. As for impact, participants are expected to put their individual project plans into motion in their local communities—so that the short course can be a “force for peace and a sustainable future.” The hosting school and the UWC National Committee in Turkey are planning to host another such gathering next summer. Saim and the other organizers shared what they learned from their project at a short course seminar on best practices held months later in Berlin.

“If we want to leave a lasting impact, we have to continue pushing for it with small steps. The world needs perseverance and consistency for change.”

Nadine Aurelia Zoro
Franklin & Marshall College

The main goal of this Ivorian Leadership Project was to promote an entrepreneurial spirit and a sense of personal discipline among youth in the Ivory Coast, based on the belief that a disciplined and entrepreneurial youth will promote and strive for a self-sustained harmonious Ivorian economy. PIL is a personal mentorship program designed to help teenagers develop their personalities and their ideas for future microenterprises and community projects in order to be activists in the prevention of new armed conflicts and work toward the economic reconstruction of their country.

Fifty-three teenage participants between 14 and 18 years old from varied backgrounds were selected from several schools across the country to reflect and try to break down the ethnic stereotypes prevalent in the Ivory Coast. They were brought together at a school in Cocody for courses in leadership and creativity, as well as active engagement in the local community. Nadine and her fellow organizers met with several challenges in organizing and managing the project and realize that creating a new mind-set takes time and requires sustained effort. She also discovered that when trying to address problems, it is essential to listen to the people involved. With these lessons learned, Nadine plans to devote herself to empowering people by providing them the opportunities and tools required for a better life.

"I am extremely grateful to the Davis Foundation for giving me the opportunity to make such a big difference in the lives of young, enthusiastic students of Charduani village, and I believe that with the help of such great organizations, we will be able to make this world a much more peaceful place."

Inara and Thomas viewed the villagers of Charduani as trapped in a vicious cycle of poverty and lacking appreciation for the benefits of education. Their project was designed to illustrate the importance of education for a better life. By creating better access to a library and the Internet as well as through workshops, they wanted to put the world within the grasp of middle-school-aged students and give them the tools to achieve their dreams.

The project began in the spring with the construction of the library and obtaining the books. In June, Inara and Thomas transported the books to the village and organized the library. They then conducted workshops for the students and their parents and introduced a “Future Stars” program, whereby students would be rewarded for reading books and writing reports. They generated great excitement by awarding stars to readers, by giving certificates to the 10 students in each grade with the most stars and a medal to the top student. Another dimension of the project was advancing computer access and literacy for the students and leading sessions for parents. To ensure ongoing impact, the project placed $2,000 in a government bank with a fixed rate of 10 percent to fund the cost of Internet service as well as more certificates and medals. The Asia Foundation will also help sustain the project by donating new books every four months.

“The idea of empowering these individuals through clean water, education, and opportunity sounds simple. But to see and hear what a world of difference it makes, it puts simplicity in perspective.”

Matt and Jesus's primary goal was to enable young entrepreneurs in Guinea, to distribute and maintain bio-sand water filters to provide clean accessible water to local people. They were fortunate to team up with Helen Bond, who has been raising funds in the United States and doing service work in Guinea for many years through her organization Motherland Rhythm Community. Helen held a benefit concert specifically in support of their project, and her long relationship with the Guineans greatly facilitated things, including helping to bring together several ethnic groups—Malinke, Sousou, Baga, Nanlui, and Forestier—in support of the project. Helen inspired Matt and Jesus with her compelling message: "We can become a powerful and unlimited force just by opening ourselves up to understanding one another; in that process we can create a more peaceful, connected and humanistic global community—person to person, hand to hand, and heart to heart."

In all, 42 filters with an anticipated lifespan of 30 years were constructed, having an immediate impact on over 400 Guineans. The project also delivered in-depth seminars on water sanitation so that those accessing the filters know how to best use and care for the devices. Helen's organization is committed to ongoing cost subsidization and other assistance as needed. And the entrepreneurship aspect of this project is encouraging local Guineans to start small businesses, with some of the proceeds going toward funding additional filters.

“Having spent months grappling with the impact of the Syrian civil war on families who fled, neighboring countries who opened their borders, and the array of social, political, and economic implications that have ensued, I have discovered that peace is coexistence—it is a state of comfort and justice.”

Empowering Voices through Artistic Expression

Jordan
Rachel Sider
Middlebury College

Rachel engaged artists from several countries and disciplines to find artistic expression in public spaces in Amman and to provoke urban reflection on the historical refugee experiences in Jordan, most recently those from Syria. The project was launched with an intensive workshop in June, gathering together 31 Syrian, Jordanian and Iraqi artists, designers and architects. Using design thinking, they engaged with the issues surrounding migration and identity and grappled with the role of artists in addressing these social challenges. The workshop achieved three main outcomes: fostered camaraderie among participants; empowered individual artists; and developed connections between participants and community organizations in support of refugees.

Over seven weeks in shared studio space, the artists pursued their own creative directions through paintings, sculpture and photography, while together they planned an exhibition that would engage the Jordanian public with the diverse demographic and social issues of refugees. In partnership with Save the Children, the artists worked with Syrian children to paint a storyboard representing the children's perspective on migration. The project culminated with A Bayad (On White), a public art exhibition lasting for six days on Culture Street in downtown Amman.

“I believe that peace can be achieved through patience, flexibility and long-term commitment. This project taught me the value of all three components and helped propel my passion to promote peace in the developing world.”

GARIMA KAPOOR, NEW YORK UNIVERSITY

Empowering Female Entrepreneurs

India

Garima Kapoor

New York University

Garima's project was to set up an entrepreneurship platform for rural women in India, teaching the basics of running a business, providing help in creating plans and management structures, and creating a seed fund to implement those businesses. To do so, she traveled to India to work with a rural development initiative in which the women of the villages were already divided into self-help groups.

Garima realized it was extremely important that the ideas for a business be generated by the women themselves—thereby creating commitment to those ventures embraced by the group. Similarly, it was essential that the women gathered feedback from their peers on product development, marketing and distribution. Ideas that were generated included almond snacks, soap bars, disposable plates made of leaves, and incense sticks. Next came business plans to illustrate the often long and difficult time to reach profitability. And finally, the introduction of a seed fund so the plans could be further developed and market studies undertaken. In the end, a group of 25 women assumed responsibility for the future of the project.

Tshediso Matake
Skidmore College

Tshediso's project goal was to empower the remote villages of Makweng and Ga-Ragoatha by providing the children and their educators with computer equipment and Internet skills and by converting a room in the Ngwanamokwena Primary School into a computer lab for the school and for members of the surrounding communities. Hardware donations came from both the Skidmore College IT department and Tshediso's former school, the American International School of Johannesburg. Tshediso and his fellow project leaders created a three-week computer-literacy seminar and delivered it to students in grades five through seven as well as to the educators at the school and the parents of the students.

The project was widely embraced by everyone from the village elders, whose permission was required prior to starting the project, to the parents of the students and other members of the community. At the outset, security at the school was so inadequate that the computers had to be transported daily to the home of the vice-principal for safekeeping. But this safety issue mobilized the parents and the school to embark on a fundraising campaign to build a secure classroom and in the interim, the school decided to turn their teachers' staff room into the computer lab. One of the most immediate benefits of the computer lab was for the rising seniors of the local high school who used it to search for scholarships and to make their university applications. Tshediso was thrilled that his project was so valuable to so many.

DUY HA, ST. OLAF COLLEGE

Rung Oi!

Vietnam

Duy Ha

St. Olaf College

Duy set out on his project with two goals in mind: to provide awareness and experiential learning opportunities about the rainforest for students in Vietnam and to create a community of support for future rainforest-related as well as other community projects in Vietnam. In addition to the Projects for Peace grant, he gained support from Live&Learn, an Australian organization that supports community projects in Vietnam.

Work began in March, putting together, largely through Skype, three groups whose members were spread out around the world and who would be responsible for program, public relations and logistics. Duy and his team found it hard at a distance and at the grassroots level to arrange for a venue and to recruit the students to attend the envisioned monthlong education program. In retrospect, he concluded that working first through the Ministry of Education would have been a better route to take. Last-minute social networking, however, led to 720 applications for the 400 slots available, so in the end everything exceeded original expectations and the rainforest summer camp went as planned. Since this was the first-ever rainforest-related project in Vietnam, Huy and his team sought to gain maximum public relations for Rung Oi! They succeeded in gaining publicity through 25 media agencies, including online and print newspapers as well as television networks. Participants gained knowledge, had fun, developed a sense of community and became attached to a social cause. Postproject surveys reflected a 98 percent satisfaction rate and a great desire for Rung Oi! to take place again next year.

“This project sustains peace through multiple forms of collective action that enable community members to harness the potential of their own social and natural assets. It reaffirms that the existing capacities and priorities of the rural poor cannot be overlooked in any project that aims to improve their livelihoods.”

JED SILVER, TUFTS UNIVERSITY

Barongin Savings and Investment Society

Uganda
Jedediah Silver
Tufts University

Jed envisioned the Barongin Savings and Investment Society (BASIS) project to provide support to farmers in the village of Barongin in northern Uganda by generating savings, access to credit, increased investment and better market access. Working with 16 existing savings and credit groups, BASIS also sought to construct a produce bulking center that in time could become a full cooperative society. The BASIS project was aligned with RREADI, a small NGO in Barongin that is involved in linking local farmers to Uganda Breweries Limited through a sorghum-growing project.

The first stage of the project was savings and loans training. Twelve groups, totaling 318 people, received this training and seven of those groups, totaling 202 people, got additional training in financial literacy. Still under development but underway is the creation of the bulking center. A committee consisting of one elected member from each trained group has been formed to obtain the labor and bricks for the construction of the center, which should be completed in time to receive this year's harvest. Jed projects that a registered cooperative society will be functioning within two years.

While peace returned to northern Uganda some years ago, few communities have had the opportunity to shape peace into individual and community prosperity. BASIS provides that opportunity through developing the social and physical infrastructure to move people beyond relief handouts and change the conversation about development work.

“Through the Voices of Hope project, Rochester’s refugee youth were not only able to express their stories through dialogue, art and collaborative service, but they also had an entire community rally to support their endeavors and to listen, captivated, to their voices.”

FATIMA BAWANY, UNIVERSITY OF ROCHESTER

Voices of Hope

USA

Fatima Bawany

University of Rochester

Fatima realized that refugee youth in Rochester, New York often feel marginalized as they cope with violent memories at home, adapt to a foreign lifestyle and education system and deal with the pressures of living in dangerous neighborhoods. She created the Voices of Hope summer program to begin to equip these youth with the tools to tackle their everyday challenges and to develop self-confidence in their talents, ideas and ability to achieve their dreams. Fatima partnered with the M.K. Gandhi Institute at the University of Rochester and Mary's Place Refugee Outreach to organize her project and reach out to the refugee youth.

The program began with a weeklong leadership retreat, centering on fostering skills in communications, conflict resolution and collaboration. Following that there were weekly meetings with students about how to apply their leadership skills in community service projects. Also part of the program was helping the youth better understand how to prepare for and pursue higher educational and vocational opportunities. The program ended with a photography project called "A View of Hope" through which students portrayed their sources of inspiration. These photographs were displayed at the culminating gala intended to connect members of the Rochester community with the refugee population.

Through her project, Fatima and her team worked with 20 young people and their families as well as affiliated religious leaders and educators to build trust and create support networks. The diverse group of students was composed of Karen refugees from Myanmar and others from various parts of Africa, reflecting 11 different languages and a wide array of English proficiency. Among other outcomes was the breaking down of ethnic barriers and the forming of new friendships between the students.

“The most effective grassroots initiatives are those that foster the confidence necessary to inspire hope and change.”

LACEY WILLIAMS AND CAROLYN PELNIK, UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA

Peace through Food Security and Gender Empowerment

Tanzania
Carolyn Pelnik
Lacey Williams
University of Virginia

Carolyn and Lacey's project sought to promote women's empowerment and food security by providing a women's microfinance group in Ngongongare, Tanzania with a business training program, including a curriculum in sustainable agriculture techniques. The desired outcomes are to increase crop yields and introduce improved business models for the local subsistence farmers. In addition to the Projects for Peace grant, support was provided through a Laura W. Bush Traveling Fellowship and the University of Virginia's Public Citizens program with space for training provided by the Jifundishe Free Library.

Working with an agricultural specialist from a nearby office of the World Vegetable Center, the project prioritized low-cost, sustainable methods of increasing yield over the long term and included such topics as crop rotation, pest management, composting and drip irrigation. A community education garden was designed and built to allow the curriculum to be highly participatory and hands-on. This agricultural training was done concurrently with a business education program provided by the NGO Global Grassroots so that the women could learn basic profit maximization, accounting and planning. The training involved 60 women whose family members totaled more than 200. Besides improving crop yield and improving business effectiveness, the project's long-term vision is that these women will invest additional income in their families and in so doing reduce rates of childhood malnutrition and increase access to education.

“Our experience in Ethiopia has made both of us acutely aware of the conditions that many in the world must endure to access basic resources. It has also provided insight as to the importance of clean and accessible water. What we have found is that clean water is an essential piece of the puzzle in attempts to alleviate suffering in our world.”

AMAN GEBREMARIAM AND SIBUSISO KUNENE, WARTBURG COLLEGE

Sustainable Clean Water

Ethiopia

Aman Gebremariam

Sibusiso Kunene

Wartburg College

Aman and Sibusiso's project had two goals. The first was to provide clean and safe drinking water through the construction of a well in Wana and the rehabilitation of a previously defunct well in Gonay Shagla, both in the Tigray region of Ethiopia. The second goal was to educate members of those communities on proper hygiene and sanitation. To implement their project, they partnered with three experienced organizations: Water to Thrive and A Glimmer of Hope, both in the United States, and Relief Society of Tigray (REST) in Ethiopia. These partnerships provided added funding as well as expertise to the project.

Looking beyond the immediate benefits of the project, Aman and Sibusiso were motivated by the prospect that access to clean water will have long-term generational effects. They foresee children unburdened from chores and able to attend school, thereby having opportunities their parents were denied. They envision the absence of diseases from clean water meaning a decline in premature deaths of children and greater health for young mothers. They see overall improvements for all members of the communities in which they worked and they have the assurance from A Glimmer of Hope that teams of engineers will ensure the ongoing functioning of the wells. Aman and Sibusiso viewed their project as advancing the cause of peace through improving standards of living, providing access to basic resources and brightening the economic prospects for the people with whom they worked side by side in Wana and Gonay Shagla.

“As much as I believe in the power of one, I believe more in the power of a few more working together, and projects like these—which catalyze future collaboration—do just that.”

LIAN CASPI, WHITMAN COLLEGE

Music for Conflict Resolution

Israel/Palestine

Alex Brott

Lian Caspi

Whitman College

Lian and Alex envisioned a symposium in Jerusalem that would bring together the many individuals and organizations using music as a tool of conflict resolution between Israelis and Palestinians. The intention was to encourage these disparate entities to network, share resources and tools and collaborate. First they immersed themselves in the local musical community, to learn from this interaction how best to put their idea into practice and to foster ownership by the desired participants.

The International YMCA, considered a neutral space, was chosen for the venue, and the symposium, reported Lian and Alex, “went off without a hitch.” The event included workshops about effective facilitation, language and the connective power of musical improvisation; a panel discussion from five leaders in the field about the varying philosophies, politics and tools employed in this work; and an evening of performances from several musical groups linked to these organizations. Among those featured were: Heartbeat, The Jerusalem Youth Chorus, Musaique, Ukeleles for Peace, Seeds of Peace and the Inter-faith Encounter Association.

As they reflected on their project, Lian and Alex shared their philosophic belief that contact is necessary to humanize the other, to find a mutually workable approach and to explore ways to live together in the future. They saw their project as a catalyst for greater and expanding grassroots work in seeking resolution to conflict.

“Through a reading program...we have set a solid foundation for the intellectual and social development of not only Mboto Sunrise students but also their community at large. This project enhanced unity and inspiration among different groups who renewed their commitment to support the school.”

JACKLINE ODHIAMBO, WILLIAMS COLLEGE

Reading to Secure the Future at Konyango School

Kenya

Jackline Odhiambo

Williams College

Jackline’s project aimed to build a culture of critical reading while also striving to improve the entire school system—its infrastructure, teacher quality, academic resources and management. The perceived value of this project attracted additional funding from a Williams College graduate to sponsor another student to assist with the reading program and to add programs in public speaking and theater.

Upon arrival, Jackline found “a bigger mess” at Konyango School (recently renamed Mboto Sunrise School) than she anticipated. So, over the initial weeks of the project, Jackline made frequent trips to buy construction materials for renovation work at the school and to obtain basic academic resources. She held meetings with parents and the school committee to explore how the community could contribute to the project. Once underway, the reading program ran morning and afternoon for primary and preprimary students through reading aloud, group reading, picture reading, building vocabularies, role playing and debating. Jackline also initiated a weekend teacher-training program in computer literacy and public speaking. The teachers’ confidence and classroom delivery were greatly enhanced and by the eighth week of the project the teachers took over the program and developed a five-year school development plan. In all, a hundred students and seven teachers gained skills and the school was improved with new furniture, new teaching and learning resources and the construction of improved facilities. Jackline reports that Williams will continue assisting the school through the funding of an annual student intern.

"I learned that a bit of energy and enthusiasm can go a long way in unleashing the entrepreneurial spirit that lies in us all."

GUILLAUME KROLL, INTERNATIONAL HOUSE, NEW YORK

From the Slum to the Job Market

Haiti

Guillaume Kroll

International House, New York

Guillaume's project sought to bridge the gap between education and the job market by offering training and material support to recent graduates of a vocational training center located next to Haiti's poorest and most dangerous slum. In so doing, he hoped to offer students the opportunity to become financially independent and avoid the criminality and violence of their surroundings. Guillaume worked collaboratively with a small Belgian organization and a local partner in Haiti, greatly enhancing the project and adding more financial support.

Building on the assumption that economic development is an antidote to violence, Guillaume and his partners developed a seven-day curriculum with two different modules. The first helped students market themselves with potential employers and the second focused on micro-entrepreneurship and how to set up a small business in the local construction sector. The project trained 46 students, ages 18 to 27, from the bricklaying section of the vocational training center. The local partner has now taken over the project to ensure future progress. Guillaume took home a deep appreciation for the challenges facing these students and hopes that his efforts will result in this handful of students finding some prosperity while avoiding a violent life.
