Projects for Peace

THE VISION OF KATHRYN W. DAVIS

Projects for Peace

When Kathryn W. Davis turned 100 years old in 2007, she set out to challenge today's generation of college students to undertake "Projects for Peace." She said to the students: "Come forward with your ideas, shape them into actionable projects, and I'll give you the resources to do your projects."

Students heard the call and responded to her challenge; this volume portrays what unfolded in the summer of 2017 as a result. They demonstrated that today's youth — tomorrow's leaders — want to be engaged, want to make a difference. The students' projects took place in many different locations around the world, but all of them were built on person-to-person relationships, the role of leadership, and finding ways to improve the human condition in the quest for peace.

We celebrate the life of Kathryn Davis as a leader — leading others in "preparing for peace."

Fellowships for Peace

Established in 2007 as a sister program to Projects for Peace, Fellowships for Peace was envisioned by Kathryn W. Davis as another way to bring about a better world. Fellowships for Peace is a long-term investment in students and professionals poised to create change. Each year, 100 aspiring and experienced peacemakers from all walks of life are granted the funding they need for summer study at the Middlebury College Language Schools and Middlebury Institute of International Studies at Monterey. Kathryn Davis Fellows for Peace receive the very best training in foreign language or policy studies, and go on to use their skills for the greater good — in peace-related professions and initiatives all around the world.

Davis United World College Scholars Program

The Davis United World College Scholars Program is a major philanthropic force in promoting international understanding. Currently, Davis philanthropy partners with 95 colleges and universities to internationalize the American undergraduate experience through scholarships awarded to more than 2,900 students.

These globally minded scholars are from the U.S. and 158 other countries, and have proven themselves while completing their last two years of high school at one of 17 United World College schools located in Armenia, Bosnia, Canada, China, Costa Rica, Germany, Hong Kong, India, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Singapore, Swaziland, Thailand, the United States, and Wales. Since its inception in 2000, the Davis UWC Scholars Program has become the world's largest privately funded international scholarship program for undergraduate education.

Introduction

This volume reports on the eleventh year of Projects for Peace, an initiative inspired by the late philanthropist Kathryn W. Davis as she was contemplating turning 100 years old in 2007. I was honored when she asked me then to develop and direct a new program to challenge younger generations to contribute to building prospects for peace in the world.

The responses to our initiative — and the results it has sparked — have far exceeded Kathryn's and my original expectations. These promising early outcomes prompted us to make Projects for Peace an ongoing and annual opportunity for students. To date, we have witnessed over 1,300 varied projects in the U.S. and countries all around the globe. All of the projects to date are listed at the back of this volume, along with a world map depicting their locations.

The Projects for Peace initiative exists to empower students to take ownership of shaping a better world, in limited but meaningful ways, through projects of their own design and implementation. In honoring Kathryn's legacy, the Davis family — through its donor-advised fund at the Pew Foundation — and others, such as the McGillicuddy and Colhoun family foundations, are committing ongoing philanthropic resources to keep this program an annual competition among all students at the partner schools of the Davis United World College Scholars Program, and at several additional educational institutions included by special invitation.

Final reports on every project since 2007, written by the students who carried them out, speak for themselves and can be viewed on our website, davisprojectsforpeace.org. Here in this volume, we offer 16 profiles of a cross section of the projects from 2017. We have a particular interest in how Projects for Peace have an impact in three ways: on our student grantees, in the communities in which the projects take place, and on the campuses to which Projects for Peace grantees belong. We analyze our projects over time, and in this volume we present findings on learning outcomes achieved by our students grantees.

Through Projects for Peace, students have the opportunity to develop many skills, and of those we have chosen to focus on Civic Engagement, Intercultural Knowledge and Competence, and Problem Solving. These were selected because they are among the skill sets identified by the American Association of Colleges and Universities as critical learning outcomes of an undergraduate education. As you will see in “Beyond the Benchmark” (pages 9–13), Projects for Peace grantees were found to have exhibited the highest level of achievement in each of these desirable learning outcomes.

While peace may be an ever-elusive goal in today’s world, the Projects for Peace initiative suggests that there are many powerful ways, for those willing to assume personal responsibility for positive change, to make a difference in the world. The innovation, energy, dedication, and effort of today’s young people are key to building stepping-stones to peace in the 21st century, and Projects for Peace gives them the resources and motivation to do so. The vision and inspiration of Kathryn Davis live on.

“My many years have taught me that there will always be conflict. It’s part of human nature. But I’ll remind you that love, kindness, and support are also part of human nature. My challenge to you is to bring about a mind-set of preparing for peace, instead of preparing for war.”

Beyond the Benchmark: Measuring Student Achievement of Essential Learning Outcomes

Projects for Peace / 2017 Research Project

By Elana K. Dean & Jon Isham

The Projects for Peace provides students with the opportunity to develop many skills, particularly around Civic Engagement, Intercultural Knowledge and Competence, and Problem Solving. While these skill sets are especially relevant to the Projects for Peace, they are also of key interest to institutions of higher education across the U.S. Indeed, these are included among the Association of American Colleges & Universities' (AAC&U) prioritized "learning outcomes" — or, skill sets identified as most critical for students to develop during their undergraduate experience. In order to understand how well students at colleges and universities across the U.S. are doing on each of these learning outcomes, the AAC&U developed a series of rubrics to facilitate scoring student work. We adapted these rubrics to the Projects for Peace in order to determine how well students are doing on core parts of Civic Engagement, Intercultural Knowledge and Competence, and Problem Solving.

Civic Engagement

Working to make a difference in the civic life of our communities, and developing the combination of knowledge, skills, values, and motivation to make that difference. It means promoting the quality of life in a community, through both political and nonpolitical processes. In addition, Civic Engagement encompasses actions wherein individuals participate in activities of personal and public concern that are both individually life enriching and socially beneficial to the community.

Intercultural Knowledge and Competence

A set of cognitive, affective, and behavioral skills and characteristics that support effective and appropriate interaction in a variety of cultural contexts.

Problem Solving

The process of designing, evaluating, and implementing a strategy to answer an open-ended question or achieve a desired goal.

AAC&U website. <https://www.aacu.org/value/rubrics>

We scored a sample of final reports from the 2016 cohort of Projects for Peace. These projects took place all over the world: India, Palestine, Rwanda, France, Nigeria, Pakistan, Zimbabwe, Puerto Rico, China, and Turkey. They also spanned a number of types of projects: youth development, humanitarian aid, art, emergency preparedness, water and sanitation, and health and health care.

We found that, overall, students exhibited high levels of achievement. In AAC&U terms, this means we found evidence of students exhibiting “Capstone” and “High-Milestone” levels of achievement. Table 1 shows the percentage of students who reached these levels of achievement for each learning outcome.

We see that 100 percent of students exhibited the highest levels of achievement for five different components, including Civic Identity and Commitment, from Civic Engagement. As one student who displayed “Capstone” level achievement on this measure wrote in her final report:

There is a lot that needs to be done to help students without access to these resources to get the support that they need ,and my passion to do so has grown by the results that I saw through this project. Young Scientists Rise taught me how to be a leader. I realized how much of a responsibility I hold because of the opportunities I have received and how much the following generation is looking up to me. I am representing my country and every black and African girl who has not been able to follow their dreams as I have. I have the duty to take what I learn and cultivate back in to the place that nurtured me into the person that I am. After I had told some students my dream to contribute to the phar-

Table 1. Learning Outcomes Achievement

	Learning Outcome Competency	Description	Students with Capstone & High-Milestone Achievement
Civic Engagement	Civic Identity and Commitment	Having a sense of civic identity or commitment to public action due to one’s civic engagement during the project	100%
	Civic Communication	Ability to effectively communicate with community partners or members to further project aims	78%
	Civic Action and Reflection	Reflecting on the aims and accomplishments of one’s project	100%
	Civic Contexts / Structures	Working with community partners or members	100%
Intercultural Knowledge and Competence	Knowledge of Cultural Worldview Frameworks	Understanding what is culturally important and appropriate to community members	100%
	Verbal and Nonverbal Communication	Ability to effectively communicate with community members	83%
	Openness	Valuing interactions with members of different cultures	100%
Problem Solving	Define Problem	Defining the problem that the project is addressing	60%
	Evaluate Proposed Solution	Proposing a project that addresses the problem	90%
	Implement Solution	Implementing a project that addresses the problem	90%
	Evaluate Outcomes	Review of project outcomes and presentation of next steps	80%

maceutical industry of Zimbabwe through discovery of new therapeutics, one of the girls held my hand and asked me to help her cousin by making sure that antiretroviral drugs are packaged in smaller capsules to make them easier to swallow. This incident touched my heart and made me realize the potential I have to contribute to my country and my community.

This student, as others did, clearly communicated how their sense of civic identity and commitment to public action was impacted by their Projects for Peace project. For all learning outcomes, we searched for evidence – a sentence, a paragraph – that was likewise able to clearly exhibit the student’s achievement.

Indeed, we find many substantive examples of students achieving these learning outcomes throughout their final reports, including for Problem Solving. Students discuss in detail their abilities to find and implement a project that would adequately respond to a specific problem. This student, for example, describes in one paragraph the key goals and objectives of his project:

The project’s main task was to reconfigure the [humanitarian organization’s] aid delivery system from a manual process of pen and paper to a data collection and management app called KoBo Toolbox. A major advantage of the app was that it combined the processes of collecting and recording data; aid delivery teams were thus able to save admin time and reduce errors otherwise made in transcribing collected data into digital records. This overall goal was broken down into four sub-tasks: (i) the creation of digital forms that were tailored to their aid operations, (ii) the optimisation of the aid ordering, packaging, and delivery processes, (iii) the training of L’Auberge team members on how to use the app, and (iv) the purchase of phones and a laptop to be used for the KoBo app.

This excerpt clearly illustrates their high achievement of the learning outcome, with insight into how their project responded to an existing issue.

We also found students demonstrating high achievement in the Intercultural Knowledge and Competence learning outcome. For example, 100% of students provided evidence of high levels of competence for Openness, such as this student:

I was so impressed and inspired by [my community partners’] relationships with the children, and ability to translate their own experiences in education and passion for photography into examples and explanations that I could not provide.

This student clearly values their interactions with members of a different culture, and highlights how their cultural knowledge allowed them to relate best with the children in their photography program.

In Graph 1, we see the full spread of achievement from the sample of final reports we scored. Overall, students provided evidence of high achievement across all of these components.

This exercise provides an example of how key learning outcomes important to institutions of higher education and international service programs can be measured. We looked to the AAC&U due to their leadership in the conversation on how institutions of higher education can identify, discuss, and measure achievement in learning outcomes. Based on their work, we chose to score Projects for Peace students on Civic Engagement, Intercultural Knowledge and Competence, and Problem Solving. We hope that the Projects for Peace’s exercise in capturing student achievement in core learning outcomes can serve as a model to the many projects and programs embedded in institutions of higher education that seek to join the conversation and do the same.

The Projects

As these projects demonstrate, today's youth—tomorrow's leaders—are engaged and want to make a difference. They see the need to build a foundation for peace out of many different building blocks. They see that peace is more than the absence of war. They see that peace takes focus, persistence, cultural sensitivity, and plain hard work. And they are inspired by the vision and generosity of the Davis family.

On the following pages are brief sketches of a cross section of the projects, informed by student reports and photographs. A complete list of the projects, participants, schools, and the countries where the projects took place can be found beginning on page 51.

Through these projects, many small yet meaningful steps have been taken toward “preparing for peace.”

Bee Preservation as Peacemaking

Palestine
 Andie Sweetman and Avalon Bonlie
 Agnes Scott College

In hills near Bethlehem, the organic farm called Tent of Nations produces grapes, olives, almonds, and other crops on land the same Palestinian family, the Nassars, has owned since 1916. Each year the family runs a series of camps where volunteers from around the world can help work the farm. “Our mission is to build bridges between people, and between people and the land,” says tentofnations.org.

Andie Sweetman and Avalon Bonlie brought in honey-producing beehives to help the farm become self-sustaining. “In the West Bank, there is a long tradition of beekeeping that has been largely abandoned due to conflict tensions,” write the two, who also led a beekeeping workshop for Palestinian children and teenagers. They expect that pollination of crops by the bees will increase the farm’s production. Tent of Nations also planned to start selling honey from the hives this fall.

“Each year, thousands of international people visit Tent of Nations to learn about the occupation of Palestine and the farm’s steadfast commitment to nonviolent resistance,” Andie and Avalon write. “Our project provides an achievable model for other people to work in solidarity with Palestinian farmers.” On its website, the Nassar family says it has been fighting to keep its land since 1991, when the Israeli government classified the farm as state-owned land under a law allowing it to confiscate Palestinian land if it is no longer being worked. The family’s “continuing commitment inspires other Palestinian farmers to return to and tend their lands,” write Andie and Avalon.

“Bee Preservation as Peacemaking demonstrates the intersections of ecological preservation, peacemaking and community organizing. As a white United States-born woman, working alongside Tent of Nations and their community partners I learned what true solidarity entails.”

ANDIE SWEETMAN, AGNES SCOTT COLLEGE

Women Empowerment Center

Pakistan
 Muhammad Haroon
 Bennington College

On the plains of Punjab, Muhammad Haroon created a village community and education center, leasing a building and spending June renovating and repairing it, buying new furniture, and hiring the first of two teachers. Villagers volunteered to help. When the center opened, it offered local women lectures in health education, classes in adult literacy, and skills development in sewing and embroidery.

The course in skills development drew strong interest. The adult literacy offering did not, so Muhammad redirected the teacher he had hired for adult education to offer free tutoring to students in grades 6-10. Demand for that was so high that, with help from his family, he hired another teacher. Some 52 students enrolled for tutoring, more than twice the targeted number.

The center plans to continue offering the sewing and embroidery class as a three-month course, for 15 female students at a time. Ten students who completed the first cycle will be selected, Muhammad said, to each receive a grant equal to $50 U.S., plus receive training in financial management and business practices.

Muhammad also reached out to an NGO, the Bunyaad Foundation, which he says will be “an intermediary between the women making handicrafts and the commercial market in the cities.” He supplemented his PfP grant with $700 from his college’s Field Work Term office, and plans to stay in contact with the teachers and community leaders as the Women Empowerment Center continues its work.

“WEC is not just a school where women get educated. It aims at empowering them by making them financially stable and active members of an otherwise patriarchal society. My efforts paid off when I saw passionate women leaving their homes every day with a hope to change their lives and those around them. I realized that often it is a small, passionate effort that makes a huge difference.”

Love of Knowledge Vietnam Expansion Project

Vietnam
Trang Nguyen and Phong Nguyen (Cornell University)
Clark University

During a seven-day summer camp program in Hanoi, 44 middle schoolers produced seven educational videos, on a variety of topics, that drew over 300,000 views on social media. Working on the project built four essential skills — in critical thinking, communication, collaboration, and creativity. When a guest speaker called those the four fundamental skills of the 21st century, project leaders Nguyen Thuy Trang and Nguyen Hoang Phong saw that they aligned well with the camp’s goals, and decided to make those four skills their focus.

“We used these ‘4Cs’ to communicate our goals to parents and got an overwhelmingly positive reception,” write Phong and Trang. “We taught these skills by guiding the campers through the process of research, scripting, storyboarding, then finally creating an educational video.”

Phong and Trang named their program SPARKamp, as part of their overall Love of Knowledge (LOK) project. Topics of the campers’ videos ranged from “What Is Artificial Intelligence?” to “Why Is Sustainable Tourism Necessary?” The organizers report that 100% of comments posted on social media about the videos were positive.

After a screening for parents at the camp’s closing ceremony, all the parents said they would send their children back to SPARKamp next year. Older campers also formed a club to keep making educational materials; and, Phong and Trang write, “we are starting to plan for a second SPARKamp next year.”

“LOK and SPARKamp have demonstrated that it only takes a small group of dedicated people to make huge waves. Most importantly, these dedicated people can come from any background, be of any age. The only thing they need is the right kind of nucleus to aggregate around, and the right kind of environment to flourish.”

TRANG NGUYEN, CLARK UNIVERSITY

“The opportunity to work with coffee processing and education in the Ancahuachanan region has instilled in each of us a true appreciation for community values, respect for grassroots education efforts, and understanding of entrepreneurial initiative. Through this project, the Davis Foundation has seeded a boundless amount of progress and hope in Ancahuachanan, and we are grateful and honored to be part of the story.”

LUCY MARSHALL AND EVA MCKINSEY, COLORADO COLLEGE

Chaupimonte Community Mill: Supporting Education through Coffee Development in Oxpampa

Peru
Lucy Marshall and Eva McKinsey
Colorado College

In a region of central Peru that has been plagued by insurgent violence, Lucy Marshall and Eva McKinsey traveled to a rural mountain town to promote specialty coffee production and invest the proceeds in local education.

Within days of arriving at a coffee farm in Ancahuachanan, “we kicked into high gear, working with a member of the local community to construct a 5x10-meter coffee solar dryer,” the two write. They “orchestrated a specialized harvest for high quality,” and experimented with alternate methods of production.

Once the coffee beans were drying, Lucy and Eva turned to education. To bring the Internet to the local school, they reached a deal to install an antenna on a nearby hill in exchange for providing the landowner with free online access. They found room in their budget to donate five laptops and a projector to two area schools. They also installed a swing set and a fence around the school grounds, funded a teachers’ course in computing, and supplied educational computer programs, games, sports equipment, school supplies, and more.

On the farm, they cleared and roofed a disused area, cleaned and repaired old washing wells for coffee, and installed new equipment. They reached agreement with the farm’s owner to donate a portion of the increased profits from the specialized coffee to continue supporting the schools.

“We were constantly amazed by how dedicated the parents were to their children’s schooling,” Lucy and Eva write. “While hearing many stories about the area’s sad history of terrorism, we also had the opportunity to witness how the community consistently comes together to provide structures of support.”

CodePhil

Philippines
 Sahir Jaggi, Sang Jun Park, and
 Vivian Shen
 Columbia University

Seeking “to teach, empower and connect” young rural Filipinos by building their digital literacy skills, CodePhil 2017 targeted the nation’s fifth-poorest province, Northern Samar. The project team supplemented its Projects for Peace grant by bringing in additional support from Columbia, MIT and Dartmouth College. With a new curriculum in programming that centered on website development, CodePhil reached 150 high-schoolers in two towns. The students built a variety of websites, developing knowledge and skills in the foundational languages HTML, CSS and Javascript. The project team also delivered free textbooks, other teaching materials and software to the local high school.

“Our main challenge was the lack of electricity — there were many situations where we had to come up with solutions to spontaneous situations,” write Sahir Jaggi, Vivian Shen and Sang Jun Park. When the school lost power on their very first day of teaching, the team quickly improvised, delivering the lesson on a chalkboard instead.

CodePhil also staged a two-day Innovation Summit that drew more than 150 participants, from high-school and college students to tech recruiters to professionals. And the team developed and distributed a learn-to-type software they named TypePhil.

That software, write Sahir, Vivian and Sang, “is the backbone of CodePhil’s overall mission to democratize digital and computer literacy in rural Philippines. Typing skills are fundamental in enabling students to achieve other digital and computer skills, helping them gain opportunities for their future. We reached 1,000-plus students this summer alone, and have plans to exponentially expand in the coming year.”

“The most impactful idea is often not the most complex or technologically advanced but a relatively simple solution, such as an offline method to teach students to type properly. CodePhil helped all of us realize that creating impact is a combination of collaboration, patience, and perseverance.”

SAHIR JAGGI, VIVIAN SHEN, AND SANG JUN PARK, COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY

“I think the biggest takeaway for the students was not only the new books and learning materials, computers or even the Internet connection they received, but that they now believe and have confidence in their ability to dream, to work hard and to achieve. I am certain that the students, with what they learned, will be able to impact their communities positively by staying in school, using the Internet positively, and becoming role models for their peers.”

ANGELA ADOM FRIMPONG, GRINNELL COLLEGE

The Aspiring for More Project: Inspiring the Youth of Jamestown to Create and Achieve Life Goals

Ghana
Angela Adom Frimpong
Grinnell College

In an area rife with Internet fraud, Angela Adom Frimpong’s project delivered a weeklong seminar for schoolchildren on setting life goals and using the Internet for positive purposes. “I had a lot of challenges with this project because of its grand scale,” Angela writes. “I worked with four schools, 140 students, eight teachers and more than 10 other facilitators.”

Angela bought and provided motivational books and three computers, plus Internet routers for each of the four schools. She also partnered with a telecom firm’s Vodafone Ghana Foundation, which provided online learning materials for the students. She arranged for the seminar to be recorded, so that students can continue to benefit from it, and she deposited funds in a bank account that schools can tap into for help in paying their Internet fees.

At the seminar, the Vodafone Ghana Foundation introduced students to Instant Schools, its initiative that provides free online learning resources. The foundation says these were “developed in conjunction with Learning Equality, a leading not-for-profit provider of open-source educational technology solutions.”

“The seminar allowed the students to think deeply about who they truly are and who they want to become, and how they can use the resources available to them to get there,” writes Angela. The experience, she adds, taught her useful lessons about leadership, communication and coordination.

Giving Peace a Chance by Starting with the Littlest Feet

Honduras
 Jenny Woods
 Luther College

“The Davis Project for Peace has taken me beyond myself and taught me the importance of giving others a chance to experience peace. It has taught me that anyone can make a difference.”

JENNY WOODS, LUTHER COLLEGE

On the Honduran island of Roatan, Jenny Woods worked with a local clinic and an obstetrician/gynecologist to tell women about classes she was offering in pre- and postnatal care. She budgeted project funds to buy a birthing bed for Clinica Esperanza; but when another U.S. organization learned of her project and volunteered to donate the bed, Jenny decided instead to provide the clinic with a Kia truck, enabling it to extend its service into new communities on the island.

Before traveling to Honduras, Jenny collected some 200 pounds of baby clothing and supplies, mostly from the Decora, Iowa community that is Luther’s home. Sorted and packed into bags, the baby clothing and supplies were given to expectant mothers who completed the classes. Those classes began with information on prenatal wellness and finished with advice on postnatal vaccinations, vitamins and breastfeeding.

Jenny also volunteered in the clinic’s women’s department and with Stacy Zuniga, the OB/gyn physician. From her Projects for Peace grant, she provided 35% of the new truck’s cost, and helped secure the remaining funds from other donors. Along with transporting Dr. Zuniga and volunteers to five communities farther away from the local public hospital, the truck will transport pregnant women who need hospital procedures, such as Caesarian sections.

Throughout her project, Jenny reports seeing “an increase in women arriving at the hospital for their prenatal care, and also an increase in women willing to attend the prenatal classes.”

“As of 2015, more than one million Nepalis have gone abroad to work — and to work in dangerous circumstances. Most come from rural villages. The founders of Maya Universe Academy started the school to foster leaders in rural villages that know the struggle and would change this situation. By providing educational resources for these students, we are moving toward a better and more peaceful Nepal.”

BICALPA BANIYA, OBERLIN COLLEGE

Chickens for Peace

Nepal
Bikalpa Baniya
Oberlin College

At Maya Universe Academy, Nepal’s first free private school, more than 400 young people from low-income backgrounds are getting an education thanks in part to their parents, who donate two days of labor each week at the school’s rural home. To generate more income, the academy has begun raising chickens. Bikalpa Baniya’s project expanded that effort by providing more parents with chicken coops, chickens and supplies.

Parents receive compensation for their work, along with the schooling for their children. “The chickens are then sold to restaurants and businesses in nearby towns and big cities like Kathmandu,” Bikalpa writes. “The profits then go back to the school.”

His project overcame various challenges along the way, from the unexpected paving of the road leading to the school, which delayed delivery of construction materials, to the difficulty of finding skilled laborers, such as welders, to build the coops.

“Despite all these difficulties we could build all the coops, place the chicks, and increase the chicken production from 300 to 1,000 chickens per month,” Bikalpa writes. “This is a big boost to greater self-sustainability for Maya Universe Academy.” The extra income, he says, will enable the school to hire more teachers, expand its hostel for housing students, build more classrooms, and attract more students.

“The long-term goal is to have production up to 5,000 chickens per month,” Bikalpa adds. Supporting the school on that scale will help it, he adds, in “forming a model that can be replicated all over Nepal.”

Edutrer

Mozambique
 Naira Abdula
 Skidmore College

Working with six other residents of Beira, her home city in Mozambique, Naira Abdula built a library and learning lab for 56 children living in a village orphanage outside the city. The team then trained 12 local facilitators in the project’s own Stage Curriculum, “in which we included all the stages that a child goes through to learn how to read, write and count,” Naira writes. “On each stage, we included a set of activities, lessons to be taught, videos to be watched, and educational applications to be used.”

The exchange rate from the U.S. dollar to the Mozambican metical dropped between the planning and execution phases — and Naira, new to construction work, underestimated what materials would be needed. With the aim of making the community an active partner in the project, the team hired local masons, carpenters and electricians for the construction work. “We created a facilitator training program in which we had three days of theoretical training and three days of practical training,” Naira writes. “At a certain point, we realized we had more to learn from the facilitators than they had from us. We would teach them the ways which they should teach the children at the learning lab, and they would naturally adapt these methods to their local culture.”

The team developed a sustainability plan for the project. The 12 volunteer facilitators are continuing to teach children at the learning center, and Naira hopes to expand Edutrer to other parts of her country.

“Peace in my opinion is just happiness. I carry in my mind the image of a barefoot child smiling because she was touching a tablet. While this might be something many of us take for granted, the happiness and the future of many children might be on that simple tablet she just touched.”

NAIRA ABDULA, SKIDMORE COLLEGE

“One of the youth, whose father killed during the genocide, shared his sad story of how he lives with the guilt of what his father did. His father has been in prison since 2000 but Emmanuel has never visited him. The 20 youth and I talked to him and helped him to understand that no matter what happened during the genocide, there’s always a way to forgive and reconcile. At the end of the month, he decided to visit his father and share with him the good news of peace and reconciliation.”

HALIMA INGABIRE, ST. OLAF COLLEGE

Icyizere (Hope) Project: Youth Promoting Peace and Reconciliation through Art

Rwanda
Halima Ingabire
St. Olaf College

As her nation continues to heal from the 1994 Rwandan genocide, Halima Ingabire led 20 young people from the Tutsi and Hutu ethnic groups through a monthlong summer camp in which they listened to speakers, discussed topics that reflected on peace and reconciliation, and joined professional artists in painting workshops. An exhibition of the students’ paintings from the camp raised funds to help genocide survivors, including two families whose children became part of the project.

Speakers at the camp came from the National Unity and Reconciliation Commission of Rwanda. They “taught the young about the tragic history of genocide in our country,” Halima writes, “and how we could work together to promote peace and reconciliation among Rwandans.” Forming into four groups for afternoon conversations, the 20 students discussed topics such as the role of Rwandan young people in reconciliation, the role of women in the country’s development, and conflict resolution.

After the camp concluded, Halima worked with five Rwandan high schools to launch peace clubs, which a total of 580 students joined. “We presented and gave each school two paintings as a symbol to demonstrate how we were promoting peace and reconciliation through art,” Halima writes. In twice-weekly late-afternoon sessions, students in the peace clubs began working on their own paintings, which they hope to sell to raise funds that can help homeless and orphan children in Rwanda.

“The over one million young people in my country applying for jobs every year are not at peace because the vast majority only knows public service as an option,” writes Rassidatou Konate. “The government can accommodate only about 1.5% of them. What about the other 98.5%?”

To inspire and guide young people in building new opportunities, the project team organized a two-week training program in entrepreneurship and leadership for 30 university students. In seven teams, participants chose a practical problem they wanted to affect, then met with entrepreneurs for feedback and guidance.

Focusing on high-poverty urban issues, team members “stayed with the problem and the people living it four times in the first week,” writes Rassidatou. “The second week, we focused on making those solutions more innovative and impactful.”

To follow up the July training, participants committed to pursuing their projects, which focused on agribusiness, breeding, culture, events and construction. The Iwili team hopes to continue this work, developing entrepreneurship clubs in high schools, using membership fees and recruiting past participants to train and guide new projects.

“As the number of Iwili clubs grows, we will have more income in the form of membership fees, which will allow us to further develop our program and let our vision unfold,” Rassidatou writes. “We believe not everyone can become an entrepreneur, but we want to make sure that everyone who can and wants to, actually becomes one.”

Information Technology Literacy for Youth Empowerment: Detonating a Ticking Time Bomb

“There were certainly some uneasy moments along the way, there were a plentiful of doubts, and there were moments of absolute vulnerabilities. In those instances that it absolutely became clear to me that I had chosen to be a part of something far greater than myself — the creation of access to opportunity for others. I knew I had to give it my all in all.”

ROBERT "BOB" OKELLO, UNIVERSITY OF OKLAHOMA

Aiming to create a program that will have a positive impact on an expanding number of young Ugandans, Robert "Bob" Okello built a partnership with BINDEC Uganda, a community-based organization that works to develop skills and bring resources to promising young people, women and others.

Robert bought 10 new HP computers, and he secured a donation of $1,000 from the University of Oklahoma Alumni Association to cover shipping costs. Working in a village in the northern region of his country, he organized the renovation of a facility donated by the community, to serve as the project's home and a BINDEC Uganda field office. Renovations included tiling, rewiring and painting; a local carpenter built furniture. A launch event for the new Digital Literacy Training Center drew almost 200 guests. By that time, 27 students, most of them school dropouts, had registered for the first training.

For the future, Robert writes, "BINDEC Uganda is committed fully to sustainably manage and expand the project, and assigned a manager to the center with a seasoned IT technician to do monthly maintenance tasks on the computers." The biggest challenges, he adds, are to manage demand for the trainings — "there are only 10 computers at the center that must serve thousands of students" — and to develop a reliable, possibly solar power supply, with local electricity subject to frequent blackouts.

"We envision the project inspiring the rise of a new breed of 'technopreneurs,' to create innovative solutions to some of the most pressing challenges in their local communities and across Uganda," Robert concludes.

Girls Empowerment for Peace and Tree Planting for Sustainability

India
Amit Prakash Bharam
Wartburg College

Growing up in a village in western India's Mulshi Valley, Amit Bharam saw how traditional wood-fired cooking helps to drive deforestation. He also saw, Amit writes, how "the entire female population, in a male-dominated society, has been suffering ... lacking access to basic information and care because of stigmas and religious beliefs associated with the female body, sexuality, and the menstrual cycle. Many girls drop out of school at puberty because of these issues."

Both these issues were targeted with his two-part project. Working with the NGO Aksahra, based in nearby Pune at Mahindra United World College, he visited area nurseries and bought herbal plants, fruit trees and other small potted trees, all chosen for local sustainability and income-generating potential. He organized their planting at a local primary school, where students committed to caring for the plants as they grow to maturity.

Amit then worked with Aksahra and a local high school to present workshops for local girls and young women. Each was given a hygiene kit. A doctor and counselor presented and discussed information, he writes, about "the human body and major issues such as the female body, safe sex and menstrual cycle."

Long-term, Amit hopes the planted trees will provide new support for poor families, while encouraging villagers to cook with gas and preserve the forest. He hopes the health workshops will help break through stigmas around the female body, encouraging girls and women to "become more driven, inspired and motivated to move their communities forward."

"I thought I was fairly knowledgeable about my locals' villages, but I learn something new about them every time, whether it was similarities in thoughts or a deeper understanding of faith. Being in this unique situation challenged my own belief and stereotypical observations, and reinforced my overall belief that differences enrich life, and that we all have something to bring."

AMIT PRAKASH BHARAM, WARTBURG COLLEGE

“There needs to be a government educational reform, but we cannot wait for it. Students, regardless of socioeconomic status, deserve the opportunity to dream of becoming doctors, engineers, biologists, mathematicians or programmers. They just need that initial spark that brightens their perspective and turns their dreams into reality.”

STEMITO: Building Brighter Futures

Mexico
 Angel Vela de la Garza Evia
 Washington and Lee University

In a 120-student primary school in Monterrey, Angel Vela de la Garza Evia led a team that rebuilt the school’s library into a two-room science, technology, engineering and math (STEM). They then delivered hands-on workshops in science, technology, engineering and math (STEM) for 30 young people, with experiments and field trips to STEM-oriented sites.

Angel’s team painted the library rooms, installed flooring, electric outlets and an air conditioner, fixed plumbing and painted a mural. Seeing the team of students doing the hard work helped persuade the community that they could be trusted and deserved support.

“They started accepting us ... the mothers would bring us lunch and homemade goods to express their gratitude for what we were doing for their children,” Angel writes. “We had multiple families around Monterrey gather recycling materials for us to use. We got donations of water and water bottles ... A local high school donated over 200 school supplies.”

For the STEMito workshops, an education major at the Universidad de Monterrey designed lesson plans and materials lists. “We focused on having one-on-one interactions by dividing the group into smaller teams and having them rotate between different stations,” Angel writes. “That way we could individually help them.”

The team also brought the students to the Alfa Science Planetarium and the Lego factory, where they watched the manufacturing process.

Hoping to deliver STEMito again next summer, the team worked with the school’s leaders and staff to develop a plan for showing new teachers how to use the room for STEM learning.

“My initiative was able to create a network of ambitious high-school girls who will lean on one another in their journey of personal development, independently of their social class, ethnic groups or religion. I was lucky enough to witness the enthusiasm, the energy and the passion among the participants. Realizing that we share the same vision for our country has motivated and inspired me.”

Sisters in Success (SIS): Empowering Girls in Burundi to Promote Peace

Burundi
Belyse Inamahoro
Wellesley College

Collaborating with a number of fellow Burundian college students, Belyse Inamahoro organized and led a weeklong summer camp for 24 high school girls in Bujumbura, her country’s capital city. The goal, she writes, was to encourage the girls “to pursue their dreams, develop their full potential, and create a generation of successful Burundian women who will contribute to the development of their country.”

Inviting online applications on Whatsapp and Facebook, the team drew responses from 119 girls, from 10 out of Burundi’s 18 provinces. Each wrote short essays on their participation in extracurricular activities, desire to change their communities, and motivation to join the camp.

Gathered in a boarding school “away from the city noise and traffic jam,” the campers participated in workshops on writing resumes, designing projects, mock interviews and more. They also received individual coaching in school applications, and joined in “visits, debates, games and presentations so that the participants can build problem-solving, self-branding and team-building skills,” Belyse writes. “Most of the teachers were successful female business owners and professionals in Burundi.”

Belyse’s collaborators in organizing the camp were college students from the Bridge2Rwanda Scholars Program, Akilah Institute, the National University of Rwanda, the African Leadership Academy, and the United World College system. She drew coverage from national and international media, including a number of Burundian newspapers.

Looking ahead, Belyse hopes to organize more events, and to work with camp teachers and participants to develop new learning opportunities, such as internships, conferences, forums and job shadowing.

Baltic Summer School of Anthropology: Designing Peace

Latvia
 Matiss Steinerts
 International House, New York

“This project was a practical tool for me to be a meaningful agent of participation in political activism in my region. Summer school was a tool to influence future thought leaders and current activists by provoking their concepts of peace and conflict.”

MATISS STEINERTS, INTERNATIONAL HOUSE, NEW YORK

For an “intense” five-day conference on ways to build peace through resolving conflict and solving tough issues, a team of six Latvian students drew teachers from five nations and 47 students from 14 countries, plus speakers from Latvia, Egypt and Jordan.

“Purposefully I have invited people from different conflict-ing regions, like Russia and Ukraine, and with opposite political views,” writes project leader Matiss Steinerts, who believes the diversity of opinions that were shared helped give the confer-ence a “vibrant mood and respectful environment.”

“Project goals were to equip scholars and local thought leaders with knowledge of diverse practices of peaceful resil-ency, global examples of managing conflict in a constructive manner” and “examples of failures from conflict zones,” Matiss writes.

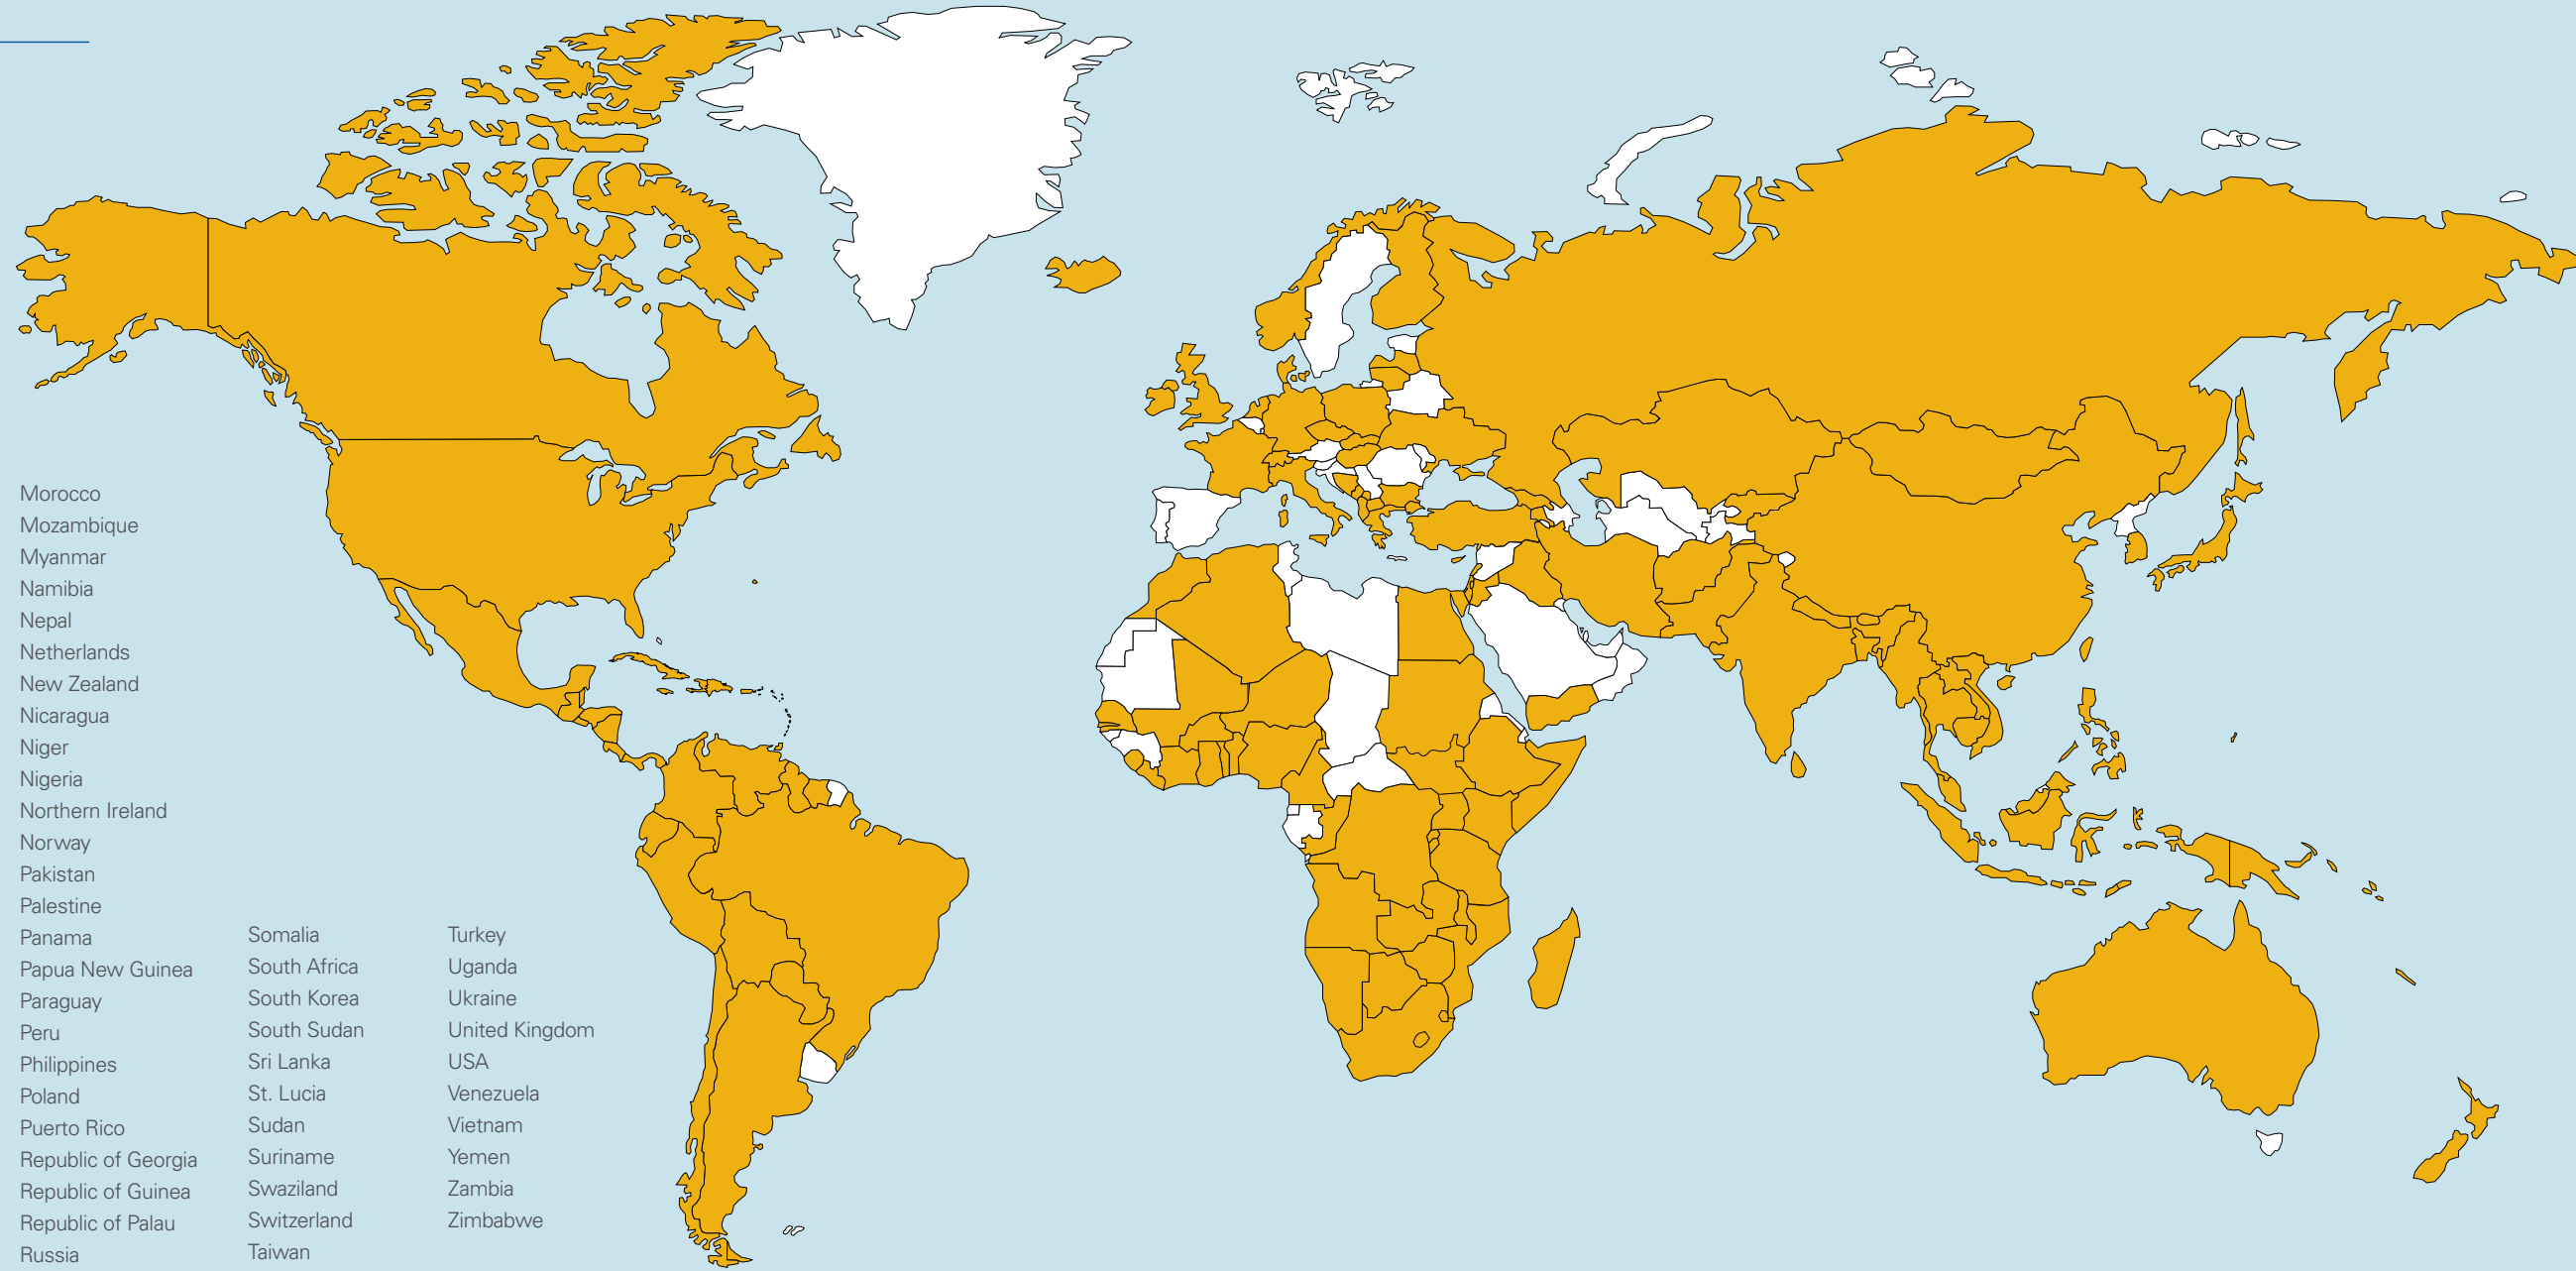

Faculty members came from the U.S., Latvia, Slovenia, Estonia and Lebanon. The keynote speaker was peace anthro-pologist Douglas Fry, Ph.D., from the University of Alabama Birmingham. Students came from Latvia, Lithuania, Denmark, Estonia, the Netherlands, Germany, the UK, Italy, Sweden, Egypt, Russia, the U.S., Ukraine and Russia. The conference was conducted in English in the medieval Latvian town of Pelci, with modest entry fees helping cover the costs.

The students listened to lecturers and invited speakers and formed seven working groups; each group was tasked with devising solutions to conflict-related challenges. “In the last day they presented their work in an idea-fair panel to each other,” writes Matiss, who adds that the participants, all activists in their home countries, both gained useful knowledge and built new social bonds.
