Introduction

This volume reports on the eighth year of Projects for Peace, an initiative inspired by the late philanthropist Kathryn W. Davis as she was contemplating turning 100 years old in 2007. I was honored when she asked me then to develop and direct a new program to challenge younger generations to contribute to building prospects for peace in the world.

The responses to this initiative — and the results it has sparked — have far exceeded Kathryn's and my initial expectations. These early promising outcomes prompted us to make Projects for Peace an ongoing and annual opportunity for aspiring students. To date, we have witnessed nearly a thousand varied projects in the U.S. and countries all around the globe. All of the projects to date are listed at the back of this volume, along with a world map depicting locations of the projects.

The Projects for Peace initiative exists to empower students to take ownership in limited but meaningful ways of shaping a better world through projects of their own design and implementation. In honoring Kathryn's legacy, the Davis family — through its donor-advised fund at the Pew Foundation — and others are committing ongoing philanthropic resources to keep this program an annual competition among all students at the partner schools of the Davis United World College Scholars Program as well as at several additional educational institutions included by special invitation.

What, one might rightfully ask, have been the impact and sustainability of Projects for Peace? Final reports on each and every project, written by the students, speak for themselves and can be viewed on our website: davisprojectsforpeace.org. Here in this volume, we offer two different ways to begin to answer the question of how these projects succeed.

One piece tells today's story of Reclaim Childhood, a project started in 2008, the very first year of Projects for Peace, which has grown into its own ongoing nonprofit social enterprise. There are many such examples of continuing impact and sustainability. Another piece here presents the findings of ongoing research on Projects for Peace conducted by the Center for Social Entrepreneurship at Middlebury College. That research reveals what elements contribute most to successful implementation of Projects for Peace, and should prove useful to students contemplating a proposal for the future.

While peace seems an ever-elusive goal in today's world, the Projects for Peace initiative suggests that there are many powerful ways for those willing to assume personal responsibility for positive change and to make a difference in the world. The innovation, energy, dedication, and effort of today's young people are key to building stepping-stones to peace in the 21st century, and Projects for Peace gives them the resources and motivation to do so. The vision and inspiration of Kathryn Davis live on.

PHILIP O. GEIER, PH.D.
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

DAVIS UNITED WORLD COLLEGE SCHOLARS PROGRAM

“My many years have taught me that there will always be conflict. It’s part of human nature. But I’ll remind you that love, kindness, and support are also part of human nature. My challenge to you is to bring about a mind-set of preparing for peace, instead of preparing for war.”

Projects for Peace Captivates Other Philanthropists

Kathryn Davis personified “leading by example.” Her vision and philanthropy inspired and motivated many others to follow her lead in support of worthy causes. Such has been the case with Projects for Peace. Here are two examples of family foundations taken by Kathryn’s powerful principles and practical program that now annually join the Davis family in growing Projects for Peace.

The Colhoun Family

“The Colhoun family has invested and continues to invest some of its philanthropy in Kathryn Davis’s vision, and encourages other philanthropic families to join us in supporting the unique and imaginative focus of Projects for Peace. We in the Colhoun family especially appreciate giving in this way because our funding goes directly into additional projects, and we need not be concerned with the operational or administrative dimensions of the program. We have confidence that our philanthropic dollars are going directly to the beneficiaries through the innovative design and management of Projects for Peace.”

— Howard P. Colhoun and the Colhoun Family

Howard P. “Pete” Colhoun

The McGillicuddy Family

“Linda and I knew Kathryn Davis for many years. She was a brilliant woman with a consuming desire to promote global peace and understanding. We are proud to play an ongoing part in carrying on her vision. To think of a program that expands the imagination and horizons of young college students while planting uplifting demonstration projects in communities across the globe was compelling to us. We are committed to future Projects for Peace alongside the Davis family.”

Reclaim Childhood: Launched in 2008, Thriving Today

By Katherine Krieg Fischer

To what extent are Projects for Peace sustainable? To what degree do they have impact? Each project has its own answers, of course, but here is one example from the inaugural year of 2008 that has grown and is thriving today.

After learning about the Davis Projects for Peace grants, fellow Williams College students Anouk Dey (2009) and Katherine Krieg Fischer (2008) were inspired to create a project to effect change in the world. After some brainstorming, it quickly became apparent that the two were passionate about three things that they wanted to incorporate into their project: (1) helping the refugee crisis in the Middle East, (2) inspiring Arab girls and women, and (3) utilizing the power of sport. As lifelong female athletes, they knew firsthand the power sport has to inspire confidence, hope, and ambition in athletes. Team-orientated sports improve self-esteem, strengthen peer relationships, and foster leadership. With the help of Williams professor Magnus Bernhardsen, the duo designed a project called Reclaim Childhood, designed to bring the benefits of sport and play to young refugee girls and women living in and around Amman, Jordan. They spent the summer of 2008 running a series of sports camps for young girls in Zarqa, a refugee community outside the city.

While Anouk and Katherine were surprised by many things that summer (the difficulty of securing field space, the importance of personal relationships in getting things done, the heat of Amman in July), they were most surprised by the power sport could play in a young girl's life. Seeing a timid, quiet girl blossom into a confident, excited little athlete over the course of just one week made it clear that they had no choice but to make sport a permanent fixture in these girls' lives. They headed back to the United States determined to incorporate Reclaim Childhood (RC) into a 501(c)(3) and lay the foundation for RC's programs lasting far into the future.

Since 2008, RC has expanded to include a fall soccer league, a spring basketball league, coaching clinics, mother-daughter sports days, and Saturday sports clinics in addition to continuing its signature summer sports camps. RC also seeks to empower the girls' mothers by having many of them serve as coaches for the leagues and camps. RC trains these mothers through coaching clinics designed not only to teach them the basics of how to coach a team, but also to empower them and help them see the value education might play for their daughters. All coaches receive a healthy wage for their time, further demonstrating the value women can have working outside the home.

While RC's programs are focused on empowering through sport, the mission has extended much further, seeking to inspire young girls and women to take their confidence to pursue higher education or whatever dreams or goals they might have. In addition to helping RC's beneficiaries and their families realize the value in female education through their sports programs, the RC team helps these girls follow through on their plans for education. RC assists in creating a game plan, finding scholarship opportunities, applying to those opportunities, writing letters of recommendation, contacting schools on the girls' behalf, and serving as a support to that girl and her family during the process of getting into a school and while she is enrolled. RC's staff also supports those girls who are in school by offering tutoring, English learning, and emotional support. In some cases, RC has been able to collect funding to help send some of their athletes to university and graduate school.

One girl, Islam, started participating in RC's programs in 2009. In 2011, she went through the RC coaching program and served on the staff. When she decided to attend university, RC helped her by assisting in her application and enrollment process, and creating a scholarship to pay for her schooling. Today she dreams of graduating, getting her master's degree, returning to Iraq to help her home country, becoming an ambassador. Watch Islam's story here: <http://vimeo.com/55710938>.

Reclaim Childhood has grown not only in terms of the programs and outreach it has on the ground in Jordan, but also in terms of the support it receives in the U.S. In 2013, the organization founded a Junior Board comprised of passionate, dedicated, ambitious young professionals. The Junior Board seeks to raise awareness of RC, promote the organization's mission, and fund-raise to help support programming. In addition, RC has numerous RC Ambassadors on campuses and in cities throughout the country, also working to promote RC's mission and helping to raise funds. College sports teams participate in RC's Goals for Girls program whereby athletes collect pledges for amounts donated to RC for each goal scored, mile run, or game won. If teams are successful, it's a win-win: a great season for those athletes, but also more support to bring the benefits of sport to young female athletes in the Middle East.

Reclaim Childhood's summer sports camps still remain the organization's hallmark program, but with a fresh twist. RC also now recruits bright young college students to complete internships with the program—helping to coach teams, run operations, and perform fund-raising. So far, the Summer Internship Program has been a sensational symbiosis: a huge help to Reclaim Childhood given its limited resources, but also an incredible opportunity for those who participate, many of whom have gone on to pursue careers in international relations, government programs, or humanitarian work in the Middle East.

While Reclaim Childhood is still a small, grassroots operation, it has a real impact not only on the young girls and women taking part in its programs in Jordan, but also on all of those involved in helping support its mission. All of which would not have been possible without the kick start from the Davis Projects for Peace.

Evaluating Project Implementation

by Elana Dean, Center for Social Entrepreneurship

The Center for Social Entrepreneurship (CSE) at Middlebury College is performing a longitudinal evaluation study of Projects for Peace. Under the direction of Jonathan Isham, professor of economics at Middlebury and co-founder of CSE, a team of researchers is seeking to define the attributes of successful projects.

In 2015, the Projects for Peace and the Center for Social Entrepreneurship at Middlebury College conducted a research study of the Projects for Peace 2009 cohort. That year, 175 students comprising 98 teams traveled to 51 countries to conduct their projects.

Characteristic of the 900-plus projects funded by the Projects for Peace to date, they spanned a number of key areas: from science and technology to the arts, from law and advocacy to health care and health. Nearly 75 percent focused on health care/health, education, nutrition/agriculture, arts, water/sanitation, or business development. While most served groups of fewer than 100 people directly (65 percent), a sizable number of projects worked directly with more than 100 individuals (35 percent). Almost a quarter specifically targeted women, and many worked primarily with children and youth. Suffice it to say, the 2009 cohort consisted of an exciting portfolio of projects.

The Question

This research study was primarily concerned with the question: What contributes to the successful implementation of a Projects for Peace project? A student team that accomplished its “original or modified goals” within the “original or modified time frame”

2009: Project Types

was seen as being successful. Since virtually all student teams encounter numerous anticipated and unanticipated challenges to implementation, it is a considerable achievement to successfully implement a project. The research team had many ideas as to what could be contributing to this; for example, the country where the project took place, the number of students on a team, or whether the students could speak the local language. To discover the answer to this question, the research team conducted a mixed-methods study that included interviewing students and conducting statistical analysis of the 98 projects.

Key Findings

Through 13 in-depth interviews, students described key attributes that were necessary to “get it done”—some of which they learned the importance of by not having included them in their project. In particular, they discussed:

- ❶ the relevance of understanding the local context;
- ❷ engaging with community members;
- ❸ limiting the project’s scope;
- ❹ communicating effectively; and
- ❺ obtaining assistance.

In reviewing all 2009 projects, there was variation in whether or not they incorporated these attributes. For example, some student teams actively worked with local organizations or had team members who were fluent in the local language, while others did not.

CSE statistically tested these five attributes to gather evidence if they contributed to the successful implementation of a project.

The research revealed statistical evidence that students were more likely to successfully implement their projects if they:

- demonstrated an understanding of the local context;
- engaged the local community; and
- limited the scope of their projects.

The research team tested other attributes as well, but were unable to find statistical evidence to support the idea that they increased the likelihood of successful project implementation in this cohort. For example, there wasn't statistical evidence that students needed a team member who was fluent in the local language to achieve project success.

Overall, these findings help us understand which attributes to focus on in future projects. By taking these findings into account, we hope to increase the likelihood that student teams will be able to successfully implement their projects.

The Projects

As these projects demonstrate, today's youth — tomorrow's leaders — are engaged and want to make a difference. They see the need to build a foundation for peace out of many different building blocks. They see that peace is more than the absence of war. They see that peace takes focus, persistence, cultural sensitivity, and plain hard work. And they are inspired by the vision and generosity of the Davis family.

On the following pages are brief sketches of a cross section of the projects, informed by student reports and photographs. A complete list of the projects, participants, schools, and the countries where the projects took place can be found beginning on page 55.

Through these projects, many small yet meaningful steps have been taken toward "preparing for peace."

“This project has allowed me to see sustainability and culture in a completely new manner. Before coming to Tanzania, I learned about development and anthropology through university classes and discussions, but spending the summer implementing this project I gained a better understanding of the challenges involved in truly bringing about change.”

KIRA LEVIN, BRANDEIS UNIVERSITY

Empowering Maasai Women through Computer Literacy and Education

Tanzania
Kira Levin
Brandeis University

Kira created her project to provide essential training and capacity-building functions for Maasai women from the Monduli and Mto Wa Mbu regions of Tanzania. When Kira arrived in Tanzania she was introduced to these communities by her partner organization Maasai Solar and Stoves — itself a part of the International Collaborative for Science, Education, and the Environment — from which she also learned a lot about solar energy and cookstove installations as she sought to increase women's empowerment. Kira's focus was on training women to use computers and cameras in order to launch their own projects and businesses.

Kira began with teaching the basic functions of typing, navigating the Internet, learning games to build English and math skills, exploring social media, and uploading pictures from a memory card to the computer. Discussions followed on inspiring and engaging other women and children from their villages to broaden the impact of this training and applying it to the small businesses that some of the women already ran — such as selling jewelry, milk, or eggs. In the wake of Kira's project, this community education in technology and business skills is being carried on by Maasai Solar and Stoves.

Kira credits the established and indigenous role of Maasai Solar and Stoves as central to the success and sustainability of her project, and reports that it continues to expand village by village.

"I have learned that in everything we do, we face difficulties; once we have devoted ourselves to success of our-work, the harder the struggles, the stronger and more empathetic we become."

THE NGONE OO, BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY

Books for a Better Society

Myanmar
The Ngone Oo
Bucknell University

The's aim for Books for a Better Society was to establish a library in Dumbang, a village in Kachin, Myanmar, to bring an increased awareness of the world and help the community make more informed choices for their society. While the library serves the whole community, it is particularly focused on the 700 or so students in the village, from elementary grades through high school. In partnership with the Dumbang Baptist Church, The was able to jump-start the village's goals for 2025 by establishing the library now, giving greater hope for the realization of sports and music centers for youth that are to follow.

The's project included plans for operating and improving the library in the future, and formulated budgets, policies, and regulations for its use. Initially the library will be run by committee members and community volunteers, and later by hired regular staff. Educational programs in the library include English classes, a reading club, a speakers program, and computer access.

The sees this library project as sustainable because essentially the whole village was involved in realizing the project, in staffing it, and making it accessible to the wide-spread community. An added benefit for The was that the project provided a chance for her to engage with village students about their lives, struggles, and hopes, which taught her new perspectives on her own country and people.

“Projects for Peace provided me with an opportunity to help empower some of the world’s most vulnerable people to sustainably prevent waterborne diseases in their communities. For that, I am deeply grateful.”

BYRON COHEN, CLAREMONT MCKENNA COLLEGE

The Gulu Clean Water Initiative

---

Uganda

Byron Cohen

Claremont McKenna College

Byron's project was a community-focused campaign to fight waterborne illnesses in Gulu, Uganda by accessing clean water and adopting healthier hygiene and sanitation practices. Its goals were fourfold: to rehabilitate 10 contaminated or damaged borehole wells; to mobilize and train 10 locally elected water source committees (one per well) in sustainable water resource management; to lead a hygiene and sanitation education and behavior-change campaign; and to conduct an impact study of the work done.

Byron was able to supplement the Projects for Peace grant with an additional $7,600 from Claremont McKenna's Presidential Changemaker Fund and another $4,000 from private donors. In the field, the project successfully ensured that 5,000 people who did not previously have access to clean water now do. And, as planned, the water source committees were established and targeted hygiene and sanitation educational programs were introduced. To administer and sustain the initiative, Byron and his two local co-founders legally incorporated a community-based nonprofit organization called Water & Health for All (WHA). WHA is in the process of developing a scalable growth model that employs the best practices in the water-hygiene-sanitation field.

Back at Claremont McKenna, the impact study is in process and intended to better inform future work in fighting waterborne diseases. Updates on the initiative can be found at waterandhealthforall.org.

“To me, this project is valuable because the community members themselves have shown they treasure and appreciate its presence and have taken full advantage of what the center offers. My summer in Yaxkukul with Centro Cultural RealizArte taught me that arts and culture have a place in promoting world peace, and that a group of like-minded, hardworking individuals can accomplish great things by working together.”

REBECCA HAYDU, COLLEGE OF THE ATLANTIC

Centro Cultural RealizArte

---

Mexico
Rebecca Haydu
College of the Atlantic

Rebecca's project partner was Centro Cultural RealizArte, an arts and cultural center in the rural Mayan community of Yaxkukul, Yucatan, Mexico, whose mission is to promote and value indigenous culture via arts and literacy. Rebecca's motivation was to serve a community where creative and educational opportunities are limited and where globalization threatens local traditions.

Rebecca benefited from months of local preparation from her partner before she arrived: hiring teachers, planning the schedule, and promoting the summer workshops that she would help to conduct. Workshops were open to the entire community and attracted a wide range of ages. The most popular workshops were photography and music as well as theater and Mayan culture. In addition to the workshops, Rebecca and her team started a library in the cultural center by rescuing forgotten books found in storage and creating activities to promote literacy and engagement with literature.

Rebecca had earlier lived in Yucatan for six months, which helped to remove any major cultural or language barriers. She benefited as well by staying again with her previous host family who became partners in her project. For Rebecca, the project was a lesson in the world of nonprofits, including their often precarious struggle for survival.

"We came to teach these girls problem solving. We are walking away having learned much ourselves. Often, people assume that 10-to-16-year-old girls can't change the world. We know they can."

HILARY JOHNSON AND GURKARAN SINGH, DARTMOUTH COLLEGE

Peace by Design

---

Ghana

Hilary Johnson and Gurkaran Singh

Dartmouth College

For their project, Hilary and Gurkaran taught a human-centered design curriculum in partnership with a Ghanaian mentorship program called Tech Needs Girls. Their goal was to inspire and prepare girls ages 10-16 to develop innovative solutions to their local problems with creative confidence. Hilary and Gurkaran were greatly impressed and inspired by Tech Needs Girls leader Regina Agyare, widely recognized for her commitment to empowering girls through teaching technology and code. Regina embraced this Project for Peace because she recognized that design thinking could be another essential skill alongside technology to foster change makers. She said, “We need a design-thinking program designed with local content and context that we can include in our curriculum.”

That is what Hilary and Gurkaran sought out to do — and accomplished. In addition to piloting their course for 32 girls during the summer, they spent significant time teaching their curriculum to the local team that will sustain it alongside the established coding curriculum. Their work is beginning to infuse design thinking into the educational system in Ghana, especially for young women in STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering, and Math). And Hilary and Gurkaran are continuing their project by producing several video modules and accompanying resources for Tech Needs Girls and other interested organizations.

Hilary and Gurkaran acted on their belief that educated and empowered women are fundamental to sustainable peace and thriving communities.

INDIRA RAHMAN, FRANKLIN & MARSHALL COLLEGE

Road to School EngTech Summer Camp '15

Bangladesh
Indira Rahman
Franklin & Marshall College

Road to School EngTech Summer Camp was an education-centered initiative in the slum communities of Tejgaon Industrial Area, Dhaka, Bangladesh. It provided English as a Second Language and Information Technology training for underprivileged schoolchildren ages eight to 13, primarily by pairing small groups of children with youth mentors. The project benefited immensely from in-kind support and volunteer recruitment from partner organizations Bangladesh Youth Leadership Center and YouthWalk Bangladesh.

The first phase of the project was volunteer recruitment — conducted largely through a social-media campaign to attract talented high-school and university students in Dhaka who would act as mentors to the younger students. The 13 volunteers finally selected were chosen through personal interviews with a nine-person panel and became known as PeaceLeaders (inspired by Projects for Peace). The second phase of the project finalized curriculum (English and basic computer skills), established the venue, solidified project personnel, and procured the materials (laptops, projectors, ESL materials). The third and central phase was the actual teaching and mentoring, which culminated with a graduation ceremony and celebration of the PeaceLeaders.

Indira's hope for the long term is that projects like Road to School EngTech Summer Camp will provide marketable skills that will help diminish poverty and create new opportunities for underserved populations.

“Acting on a good idea is always better than just thinking about it. This project has given me tremendous courage and strength to take action on small ideas.”

LIANNA NOVITZ, MACALESTER COLLEGE

Seeing through a New Lens Together

---

China

Lianna Novitz and Haimeng Zhang

Macalester College

Haimeng and Lianna's project in China aimed to raise social awareness of the problem of left-behind children and to make educational resources more accessible to rural areas. They sought to do this through a summer camp for children focusing on music, English, literature, photography, and art. Their essential goal was to give the children confidence to express themselves and to give them inspiration for their futures.

The camp took place in Haimeng's hometown of Guoyang, a village in Anhui province, and was assisted greatly through a partnership with Jiuqian Volunteer Center in Shanghai, which donated numerous books and magazines as well as volunteers. One of the memorable highlights of the camp was watching students who had never seen a camera before being thrilled at touching and using one. Another highlight was having the students keep daily journals and thereby learning much about themselves in the process. The camp culminated with an exciting and eye-opening trip to Shanghai during which the selected students embarked on a scavenger hunt — including asking questions (in English!) and using their new photography skills to take pictures of foreigners they encountered in their newly discovered city.

Haimeng and Lianna hope to see their initiative adopted by students at the new United World College school in Changshu, China as one of their Project Week services.

“This experience shows us we don’t really need a lot to make change. Everything could go well with volunteerism, motivation, determination, positive vision, and good attitude.”

ARCHIBAL MIRACLE AND GYNAL SAINTILLEN, METHODIST UNIVERSITY

Family Farming for Peace

Haiti

Archibal Miracle and Gynal Saintilien

Methodist University

Archibal and Gynal undertook their Family Farming for Peace project in their home country of Haiti to increase the availability, accessibility, and variety of foods for the people of Cite Soleil. Through their project they selected and trained 25 residents in organic-farming methods and provided them with seeds for developing vegetable gardens. To expand the impact, each of these 25 volunteers — who they named “promoters” — identified and trained another 20 people in organic-farming production.

The training of these volunteers focused primarily on soil and compost preparation, safety and security of the plants, and sowing methods. Five demonstration gardens were built locally to serve as models for the envisioned family farms, which at the end of the summer numbered more than 150 gardens. Besides sharing technical expertise and providing supplemental food, the project created social cohesion, improved living conditions, and created a more nutritional diet for the engaged local population. The families who participated were given seeds for tomatoes, sweet peppers, hot peppers, cabbage, eggplants, cucumbers, spinach, leeks, carrots, onions, okra, and beans.

Archibal and Gynal reported that they went with the objective of investing in people but not expecting such immediate results. They were delighted to have received a warm welcome, genuine respect, and real appreciation by the local population for the opportunity being offered to them.

“Creativity is inherent in every person and it is important to realize this as a potential tool for social change. This Project for Peace provided me the opportunity to explore my own creativity as an individual, and use it to provide a platform to young people where they can demonstrate their creativity for problem solving.”

NAINA QAYYUM, MIDDLEBURY COLLEGE

Creative Youth for Community Leadership Enhancement (CYCLE)

---

Pakistan
Naina Qayyum
Middlebury College

Naina initiated Creative Youth for Community Leadership Enhancement (CYCLE) in her native Islamabad, Pakistan to provide a platform for young people to learn about design thinking and implement it to seek solutions for social impact problems. Her aim was to nudge the creativity of the participants and help them realize their potential as creative thinkers, as well as share their ideas on solving problems for their respective communities.

CYCLE was implemented through a platform called Design Soch Pakistan (soch means “think” in Urdu). Naina recruited a team of five talented young women from Islamabad who became central to the different aspects of planning and implementation of the project. Participants were recruited via an online Google form, which was advertised through social media and local organizations. The design thinking concept used in the project was defined by IDEO and the program was supplemented by guest speakers, including Pakistani social entrepreneurs. The program was held in both Urdu and English, and most activities were done in teams leading to final presentations on the last day.

While Naina admits her project is only a drop in the ocean and that she encountered numerous challenges and frustrations, she is hopeful that this sort of initiative can harness positive energy and that this type of learning can engage a widening peer group in creative problem solving in Pakistan.

“To make peace by doing what you love should be a simple enough thing; I have always wanted to make peace through music. But I was mistaken in thinking that this meant performing music — though it can, and I hope it will, what is peace if not constant and grateful listening?”

STEPHANIE LIU, PRINCETON UNIVERSITY

Together in Music

USA

Darya Koltunyuk and Stephanie Liu

Princeton University

Stephanie and Darya's Together in Music project aimed to bring together youth from various socioeconomic backgrounds through an intensive chamber-music camp. They hoped that the act of engaging in chamber music would allow the participants to embrace music as a collective activity, and that the leadership and listening skills they would develop through such collaboration would encourage them toward a more constructive mind-set in their other pursuits.

Stephanie and Darya gathered 29 participants, ages 6-18, from all around New York City at Opportunity Music Project's midtown headquarters for six straight days of intensive chamber-music making. Following several days of individual practice, the group reconvened for performances at senior centers, nursing homes, and a professional concert space. The project was greatly facilitated by partnership with the Opportunity Music Project, which provided space, instruments, and professional coaches using a proven curriculum. The participants responded very positively and made remarkable progress both in their individual and group playing.

While each participant had a unique experience, the single most important and unifying outcome of Together in Music was the simple yet incredibly difficult ability to listen to each other. The project's focus was on the development of community awareness and collaborative progress. Stephanie and Darya believe that the capacity and desire to listen is a musician's greatest asset, and they were pleased to manifest that belief in their Project for Peace.

“Peace starts within, and spreads through our respect for others. You realize it’s not poverty that creates violence, it’s disconnection.”

VALENTINA CABANZO AND SERGI SAURAS,
SAVANNAH COLLEGE OF ART AND DESIGN

Playing for a Goal in Siem Reap

---

Cambodia

Valentina Cabanzo and Sergi Sauras

Savannah College of Art and Design

Sergi and Valentina created Playing for a Goal to provide both children and trainers with the tools and knowledge to codesign and execute a sustainable sports program for underprivileged children in Siem Reap, Cambodia. Their project was conceived as an inclusive program to bring together boys, girls, minorities, and children with disabilities to give them all the opportunity to play together for a goal.

Working together with partner and local nongovernmental organization Globalteer was key to their project in terms of logistics, training, playing fields, and transportation. Playing for a Goal took place in multiple schools and directly reached over 100 children. Discussions were held on topics such as equality, leadership, courage, friendship, and even protection against sexual diseases — all through sports and fun games. And together with Globalteer, Sergi and Valentina developed a strategy for sustaining the initiative.

Sergi and Valentina were inspired by the basic idea that sports can be a catalyst for social change. The tools, resources, knowledge, references, and materials that Playing for a Goal provided to Globalteer ensures a long-term application of an approach that proved effective and seems scalable from small village schools to larger communities.

“As a witness of how something as small as a mechanical hand pump can help save the lives of thousands of students, I believe the developments and education on more projects like this must find their way to all regions of Afghanistan. Education is the only key to the door of peace that could be opened in Afghanistan.”

MOHAMMAD MUDAQIQ, THE COLLEGE OF IDAHO

Promoting Education and Saving Lives through Hand Pump Water Wells

Afghanistan
Mohammad Madaqiq
The College of Idaho

Mohammad's project was to build water wells at six different public schools in Mazare-Sharif, Afghanistan. He sought to mitigate the Taliban's harmful and often deadly practice of poisoning school water wells and, at the same time, to prevent the spreading of waterborne diseases. Students and community members would gain access to clean, sanitary, and disease-free water by improving water quality and removing an element of fear that often deters students from attending school.

The impact of Mohammad's wells is impressive: he estimates that 18,000 students, and another 10,000 local people, are benefiting from access to clean and safe water. Since the wells are no longer exposed and uncovered, families can now confidently send their children to school without the fear of a poisoned water source. And each public school with a new well has committed to maintaining their well in good condition.

Mohammad's aim was to solve water problems in several schools but to also demonstrate an approach that can be replicated throughout the country. Furthermore, he believes that such a project can provide a sense of hope to a country that has been suffering from decades of civil war.

“I now know that peace does not come only with diplomatic negotiations, agreements, and formal handshakes. We can make peace if we simply show refugees that they matter. By providing for them what has been taken away, we are making a huge investment into their future.”

DIMA YANKOVA, UNION COLLEGE

A Right to Play

Bulgaria
Dima Yankova
Union College

Dima's goal for her project was to provide a safe and stimulating environment for the thousands of refugees who have claimed asylum in Bulgaria since the start of the war in Syria. Her Projects for Peace grant was used for construction of modern outdoor sports facilities where volunteers and community members can organize sports activities. Dima partnered with the Refugee Project, a nongovernmental organization in Bulgaria that serves the children of refugees by engaging them through social and physical activities, so important to any child's healthy development and well-being.

Most of the refugees in the camps are Syrian Kurds whose basic needs — food, clothing, and shelter — were being met, but the vast majority of children lacked any space for social or physical activity. That is why Dima saw the merit in constructing safe and appealing facilities available to the many refugee children dispersed among the three state-owned refugee centers in Bulgaria's capital. Moreover, Dima realized that as the European refugee crisis deepens, it is imperative that we help the refugees thrive, not just survive. And she sees the need to change the mentality of those Bulgarians (and those in many other countries) who have demonstrated unprecedented hostility toward incoming refugees.

Dima believes that the future prosperity of Syria and its neighboring states depends on the way we welcome and treat those who have chosen not to be part of the conflict. Through this project, Dima has demonstrated a humane and caring attitude toward those seeking assistance.

“This Project for Peace taught me that long-term development and peace building are not achieved by imposing our personal perspectives and ideas on communities abroad. Rather, it is imperative for us as leaders and peacemakers to build intercultural relations and encourage the pooling of ideas from within these communities to ensure our utmost best that our projects benefit their needs and aspirations.”

DALAL AWWAD, INTERNATIONAL HOUSE, ALBERTA

Children's Peace Library

Palestine
Dalal Awwad
International House, Alberta

Dalal's project was designed to improve children's mental health by developing a community-based library in Betein, Ramallah, West Bank, Palestine. In partnership with Betein's Community Council, Dalal converted a large room into a library to encourage children and adolescents to utilize the space as an outlet to learn more about peace by reading and being exposed to different perspectives. Students and parents in the Ramallah area contributed over 500 books and the Palestine Ministry of Education and the Give Palestine Association donated another 300 books from authors from around the world.

The project's funds allowed Dalal to outfit the library with a television, a computer, a printer, tables, chairs, and bookshelves and to purchase various reference books. In addition to providing the space, the Betein Council provided electricity, water, heat, and Internet access as well as the salary for a librarian. Currently, the library is open six hours each day and children from four surrounding villages are benefiting. Betein's community members are continuing to support the project with their time and resources. The librarian, Um Ahmad, says, "I am excited to be a part of this peace-building project as a way to contribute back to my community. I hope the activities and competitions we plan will encourage children to read at a young age, and that reading will no longer be restricted to school-books and homework."

Dalal reports that the Betein Council views this library as a first step towards developing a large Community Learning Center that will expand the library's value for older age groups as well as offering tutoring programs, language classes, and other activities to enhance intercultural communication.

“My hope is that these young women will try and be active participants in the peace-building journey that Rwanda has undertaken since 21 years ago. I am deeply indebted to all that helped me realize my dream to create this mentorship program, especially the Projects for Peace grant program.”

PATRICIE UWASE MAVUBI, INTERNATIONAL HOUSE, BERKELEY

100 Women Who Will Impact Rwanda

Rwanda

Patricie Uwase Mavubi

International House, Berkeley

Women have been the highlight of the success story of Rwanda’s recovery from the destruction caused by the genocide that claimed approximately a million lives some 20 years ago. Patricie saw that Rwanda needs new generations of such women to keep the momentum going and designed her project to inspire younger generations of women. She organized and ran a mentoring camp for 100 young women from 20 secondary schools across the country — to foster leadership and to build further awareness of mentorship.

The selected participants, ages 12 to 18, were chosen from all five provinces of Rwanda. Patricie’s recruitment team of eight spread out across the country and through interviews sought to find girls that were self-motivated, disciplined, creative, open to new ideas, and who had the potential to make the most of the mentoring camp. The hundred selected campers became pioneers in a network which has been called “the 100 Women Who Will Impact Rwanda” and which is envisioned to take place every year.

The camp took place on the Nyarugenge campus of the University of Rwanda in Kigali, the capital. For seven intensive days, these pioneers and a range of prominent panelists held meaningful discussions on the power of a dream, the power of mentorship, career and educational opportunities, and the character of a successful person and leader. The highlight of the program was a glorious Mentoring Walk through one of Kigali’s busiest streets en route to Rwanda’s Parliament, a parliament that is recognized worldwide as having the highest percentage of women parliamentarians.

“This project was important to me because of its focus on peace as a generational inheritance. There is only so much we can do in the here and now to remedy the effects of violent conflict. However, by starting anew with the next generation, teaching them what peace means and how they can build a meaningful future, we can ensure that peace is fully realized by those that we leave behind. A peace legacy.”

JONATHAN CARRAL, INTERNATIONAL HOUSE, NEW YORK

Vocational Training Facility: Building Opportunities for Child Soldiers

Democratic Republic of Congo
Jonathan Carral
International House, New York

As an intern with Justice Rising International, a small nonprofit based in Goma in the Democratic Republic of Congo, Jonathan was well placed to implement his Projects for Peace grant to build a vocational training center for former child combatants. The center was built in the rural village of Kalembe, located nearly seven hours from Goma, and a village that has been a target of military recruitment of children.

With the center now in place, Justice Rising is able to provide opportunities for youth in spite of ongoing conflict in the area. Twenty young people are presently utilizing the vocational training center — at which job skills training and psychosocial rehabilitation initiatives are combined. Justice Rising and another organization, Innocent Voices, furnished the center with $5,000 worth of training equipment to create an apprentice-like atmosphere to prepare students for the prospect of sustainable jobs in the future. Jonathan reports that without such marketable skills, children transitioning into adulthood are otherwise desperate and can often feel obligated to join the military just to survive.

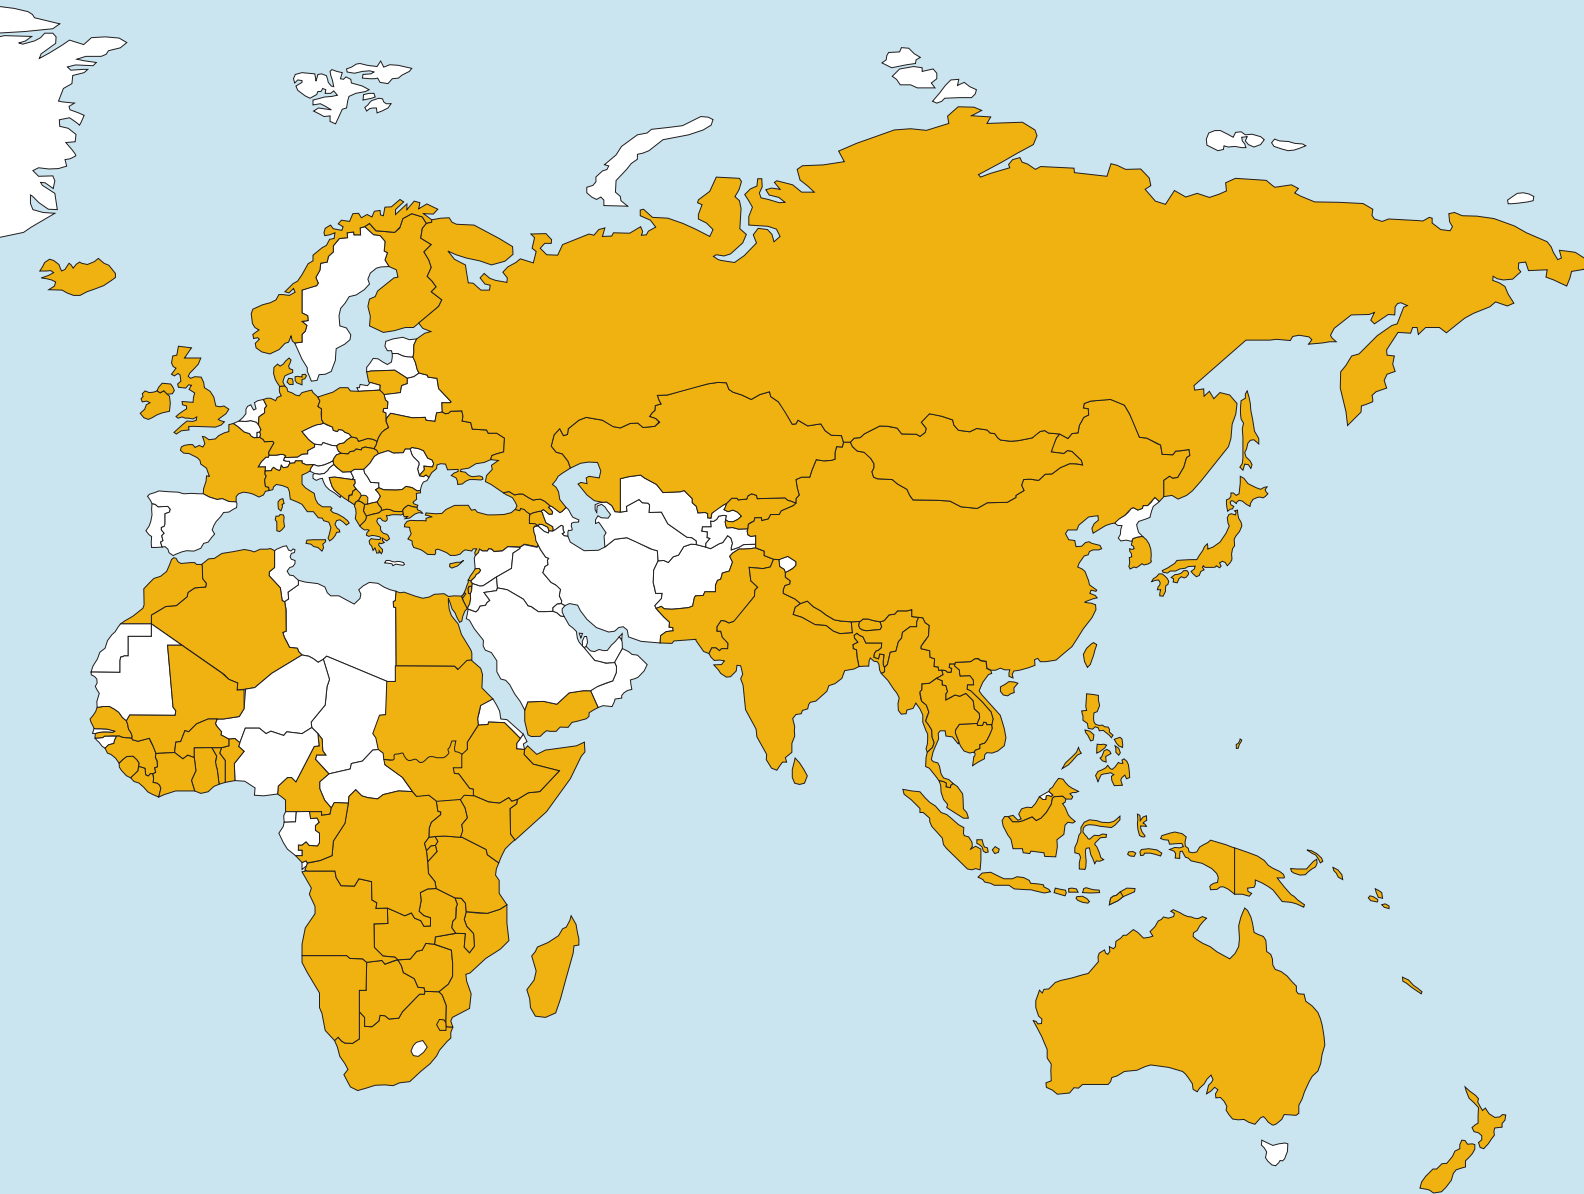

Jonathan is hopeful that his project of disincentivizing at-risk youth from turning to the military for stability while empowering them to pursue alternative paths for their futures will be truly transformational.
