The Middlebury Institute of International Studies at Monterey's Collaborative in Conflict Transformation (C-CT) is an interdisciplinary initiative that aims to foster an understanding of conflict transformation in its multiple and diverse forms. The Collaborative brings together faculty and staff across the Institute, including from the School of International Service, the School of Policy and International Affairs, and the Brattleboro Campus, along with local community partners. The retreat featured discussions among “pillar” organizations such as the Center for Nonproliferation Studies, the International Monetary Fund, and the Friends Committee on National Legislation, as well as the School for International Training.

Faculty and staff from our Monterey, Bread Loaf, and Middlebury campuses, and local community partners. The retreat featured discussions among “pillar” organizations such as the Center for Nonproliferation Studies, the International Monetary Fund, and the Friends Committee on National Legislation, as well as the School for International Training.

C-CT supports research through grants to support research projects related to conflict transformation, including peace and security studies as well as migration and refugee issues, to real-world professional practice. It also supports the implementation of the C-CT Summer Internship Program, which provides opportunities for students to engage in conflict transformation projects around the world. The program includes internships at the Middlebury Institute of International Studies, as well as the Center for Nonproliferation Studies, the International Monetary Fund, and the Friends Committee on National Legislation.

The Collaborative in Conflict Transformation invites proposals for grants to support research projects related to conflict transformation, including peace and security studies as well as migration and refugee issues, to real-world professional practice. It also supports the implementation of the C-CT Summer Internship Program, which provides opportunities for students to engage in conflict transformation projects around the world. The program includes internships at the Middlebury Institute of International Studies, as well as the Center for Nonproliferation Studies, the International Monetary Fund, and the Friends Committee on National Legislation.

The Kathryn Wasserman Davis Collaborative in Conflict Transformation invites proposals for grants to support research projects related to conflict transformation, including peace and security studies as well as migration and refugee issues, to real-world professional practice. It also supports the implementation of the C-CT Summer Internship Program, which provides opportunities for students to engage in conflict transformation projects around the world. The program includes internships at the Middlebury Institute of International Studies, as well as the Center for Nonproliferation Studies, the International Monetary Fund, and the Friends Committee on National Legislation.

The Collaborative in Conflict Transformation invites proposals for grants to support research projects related to conflict transformation, including peace and security studies as well as migration and refugee issues, to real-world professional practice. It also supports the implementation of the C-CT Summer Internship Program, which provides opportunities for students to engage in conflict transformation projects around the world. The program includes internships at the Middlebury Institute of International Studies, as well as the Center for Nonproliferation Studies, the International Monetary Fund, and the Friends Committee on National Legislation.
Same but Different is a collaboration between Christal Brown and Lida Winfield, exploring their similarities and differences in a cultural commentary on race, age, and gender. 44 years young and recently orphaned, Lida grew up in the North, Christal grew up in the South, both of them grew up inhabiting small towns. Lida is white, Christal is Black. As children, Christal was considered a genius and Lida was labeled dumb. At this point in their lives, Lida and Christal have both lived the rigors of being artists, professors, educators, and survivors of life. Same but Different runs for a half hour, followed by the show will be a question-and-answer session with the artists. Same but Different was created with support from Middlebury Performing Arts Series, The Flynn Center for the Performing Arts, and the National Performance Network.